Congressional Politics—The Kansas Emigrant Aid Society.

BOSTON, Saturday, Sept. 1.

Hon. GEORGE S. HILLARD, of this city, was appointed Attorney General by the late Anti-Nebraska Convention, without his knowledge or consent.

A meeting of the Kansas Emigrant Aid Society was held this evening, addresses were made by Rev. EDWARD E. HALE of Worcester, GEORGE B. EMERSON, Esq., and Mr. BROWN of Kansas, and others. These addresses were chiefly the first to consider the cost on the best method of making all the Missouri or Border ruffians members of the Aid Company; the most effectual means of dealing with the various Religious Societies which are interested on the subject of Kansas, and to invite more contributions; and, the third, to raise by general subscription in this State, a fund sufficient to make the whole project succeed.

He also says that, if the 37th Section of the Kansas-Nebraska Act, he holds office for four years, and gives notice that he will resist the action of the President though the Court.

The City Regulation.

Your article of this morning on "The City Budget" commends itself to the favorable attention of every tax payer in the City. The adoption of its valuable suggestions would doubtless increase the City revenue to an extent even greater than your estimate, besides effecting what is of equal if not greater importance, the entire security of the department.

The subject is also well worthy the attention of the legal profession, and the large class of persons who are interested as owners by judgment or otherwise, in mortgaged lands. By the established rules of our courts, the City Chamberlain is the custodian of all surplus moneys arising from the sale of mortgaged premises under decree of foreclosure. With the utmost dispatch, weeks after sales before the priorities of parties respectively entitled to such surplus can be determined; their money, meanwhile, lying idle, or its accruing interest being pocketed by the Chamberlain. And finally, when the order for payment is made, the parties is subjected to the imposition of a commission, well or less of interest, by way of compensation to the Chamberlain for his very valuable services in holding the deposit. THE SPIRIT-RAPPING PROPAGANDA.

Movements of the Spiritualistic School—Sunday Services—Conferences, &c.

PROFESSOR MAPES AMONG THE CONVERTS.

Few of our readers are probably aware of the extent of the machinery by which the apostles of the Spirit-Rapping philosophy are laboring to extend their sect throughout the country. It seems to be natural that every person who adopts any creed, religious, social or political, should desire and endeavor to convince others of its truth. This is prominently true of those who suppose they have discovered a new philosophy or a new religion,—for just in proportion to the imagined importance of the discovery will be the zeal and earnestness of its disciples. The Spiritualists are by no means behind any of the various schools of lunatics of the day, in this respect. They have a regularly organized Propaganda,—with a central society, affiliated branches, newspaper organs, book publishing establishments, missionaries, and all the machinery necessary for the extension of the Spiritualistic faith. Judge EDMONDS and N. P. TALLMADGE are the high priests of the new faith, or rather they are put forward as its most conspicuous champions,—the high positions they have occupied in society and political preferment to give more weight to their opinions than could be derived from any other source. But they are really far less accomplished and experienced in the mysteries of this new creed, than many of its less prominent and notorious advocates.

It is claimed by the leaders of the Spiritual System, that it has made more rapid progress and more extended conquests, since its first promulgation, than any new philosophy or religion ever started; and unless Mahometanism and Mormonism are exceptions, we are inclined to think the claim well founded. It is but five or six years since the movement was commenced by the performances of the Fox family in Rochester;—and we presume that the sect which has grown up from that beginning, and which believes in the pretended spirit revelations, of which those were specimens, numbers not less than fifty thousand in the United States at the present moment. There are in this City alone, several thousand of them,—numbering persons of intelligence and standing, and including especially, ladies from every rank of society. It is, indeed, getting to be quite fashionable to keep mediums as attaches to the family or social circles of those who believe in the system and can afford the luxury.

Regular services, in imitation of Church services, are held by the Spiritualists in this City and Brooklyn; and conference meetings, after the example of some religious denominations, are also common. The following notice appeared in the TIMES of Saturday last:

"SPIRITUALISM.—Mr. R. P. AMBLER will lecture at the Stuyvesant Institute, No. 659 Broadway, on SUNDAY MORNING, at 10½ o'clock; subject: Nature Viewed in its Spiritual Aspects. Lecture in the evening by WILLIAM FRANCIS; subject: The Day of Judgment Fulfilled in Present Events."

At the morning service some two hundred persons were present, filling the room, and embracing persons apparently of every class. The audience was highly respectable,—consisting of at least half ladies,—and presenting an unusual proportion of long beards and unshaven faces. When the time for opening arrived, Mr. AMBLER went up to the platform and seated himself in a chair, having simply a table with a hymn-book upon it before him. He is a young man, with full sandy beard, good face, bright eyes,—resembling somewhat in his personal appearance Mr. DANA of the Tribune. We understand he has a good deal of reputation with the Spiritualist Fraternity as a medium. He gave out a hymn to be sung, reading it with great affectation of elocution,—rolling his r's vehemently,—pronouncing wind, wind, &c. The hymn was addressed to God as perceived in Nature,—felt in the winds, seen in the stars, heard in the pealing breeze, &c., &c.; and was sung by three female voices and one bass male voice, with the accompaniment of a flute.

After this introduction Mr. AMBLER proceeded with his discourse, which was a very florid piece of declamation, abounding in high sounding flights of poetry, and expressing only in the vaguest manner the doctrine it was designed to set forth,—which was, that in Nature man can find all the truth it is needful to know. He began by speaking of the different lights in which Nature is viewed by different men,—the militarian seeing in it only the means of wealth, the chemist regarding it as a laboratory for mechanical processes, and the philosopher as the manifestation of certain laws. But he urged that it ought also to be regarded as ministering and revealing all spiritual truth,—and went on to say that all our highest ideas of truth—our ideas of God, of immortality, and of beauty—were derived from Nature, and from Nature alone. Upon this basis he proceeded to condemn those who supposed God is to be worshipped in temples made with hands, and to insist that true worship was to be paid only in the temple of nature, and was prompted by the angel spirit that dwelt in man. Throughout the whole discourse, which was pronounced memeric, and with great affectation of gesticulation and rhetorical modulations of voice, not an allusion was made to the Bible, nor to any system of revealed religion. The sentiment of the whole was thoroughly and exclusively Pagan,—as completely so as the old Greek religion, going back, indeed, to the same source as that, but lacking its exquisite beauty and the magnificent superstructure of its mythology.

After a particularly florid sentence, uttered with great vehemence, Mr. AMBLER put his hand to his forehead, as if in pain,—sat down and gave indications, by sundry spasmodic jerks of his body and hands, of certain spiritualistic influences which he could not resist. The Choir then sang another hymn, after which Mr. AMBLER dismissed the audience with the following benediction:

"May the infinite intelligence of the universe attend you, and His ministering angels guide you in the pathway of truth."

A collection was then taken up, which yielded apparently some twenty or thirty dollars, and the audience dispersed.

THE CONFERENCE MEETINGS.

In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, a conference meeting of Spiritualists was held, at which each person present is standing to speak on the subject, and state any facts that may have come within his knowledge. At the meeting yesterday only half a dozen persons were present at the hour designated, and others dropped in very slowly, so that at 3½ o'clock not over forty or fifty had assembled. After a very long time of profound silence, Mr. FARNHAM, one of the editors of the Spiritual Telegraph, came and made some remarks about the embarrassments Spiritualism encountered, from the fact that it was held responsible for other doctrines than those which belonged to it. Persons would very often, at their meetings, introduce other topics, and then Spiritualism was held accountable for whatever they might say. He thought the system valuable as having demonstrated the fact of immortality. The Christian world believes its faith in a future life from the fact that Christ rose from the dead. But they also hold that Christ was more than man; therefore the fact that he rose from the dead by no means proves that we shall also. The Bible evidence of immortality is thus unsatisfactory. But when we hear from, talk with, and touch the spiritual bodies of our deceased friends—as he and many others had done—there could be no longer any doubt. We have the same proof that they live, that Thomas had of Christ's living: and when we see such manifestations as are daily presented, we can no longer doubt that Peter's prison doors were opened and that Philip was caught up into the air. Such things happen now every day. Now can they be explained by electricity, the Odic force or any of the theories that have been started. We must have some theory that will explain all the phenomena exhibited; and none but that of Spirit agency will do that.

Another gentleman, evidently a strong admirer of Western Rights, said that the Spiritualists never could be faithful until every man had his share of land, and until every man had a home of his own. The Choir sang, and Mr. FARNHAM, of his counsel. The Choir sang, and Mr. FARNHAM, of his counsel. The Choir sang, and the meeting adjourned until the male should be his proper bird.

Mr. MAPES, of Baltimore, next made a long speech, having no very definite connection to distinct his own ideas in connection. He claimed for himself an understanding of a special mission which neither was embarrassed by anything, for twenty years, of the Church, the Universal Church, and of all other Churches, and yet he was not a member of any Church. He was

How the Questions of the Nationalities Are Connected with the War.

SIR: The British Parliament has been prorogued on the 14th, and Lord PALMERSTON enters on the sweet relaxation from Parliamentary skirmishes under auspicious augury, the telegraph having brought the day following news of the bombardment of Sweaborg, attended with "complete success," says the report. Should Lord PALMERSTON, by a lucky chance, happen to be ushered into the next session of Parliament by the announcement of some other success, he may keep his office a good while, and have a session less stormy than the last. The bombardment of Riga would make him secure in his seat, and the logic of such an event would make him, besides, a great man in history in spite of himself, as a bombardment of Riga would, which against his will, modify the character of the war, and put something into it deserving even the applause of republican America. However, precisely because the bombardment of Riga might possibly exceed in political results the half-willed intentions of the rulers here, I do not anticipate anything like it, though the crews in the Baltic being quite frantic with enthusiasm about the cheap success at Sweaborg, it is quite likely the Admiralty may, in the interest of their own glory, attempt yet something more. But they will not go beyond Revel at the utmost, this year.

Queen VICTORIA must be quite happy at the lustre which the glad tidings from the Baltic will have spread over her visit to Paris. BONAPARTE would have given much for something of that kind in the progress of his visit to England; but he, from want of anything better, was obliged to restrict himself to an emphatic pronunciamento of the Alliance with Austria having been most assuredly secured, which, however, turned out mere fudge. The Queen of England had better luck. Hence, of course, there is great joy in Israel; for sneaks the very larks in the air will chirp Sweaborg. Do not grudge England the little pleasure—they had long to wait for something to live upon.

You must, of course, make due allowance for the excitement of correspondents from the Baltic, and keep a margin for exaggerations, when they tell you that Sweaborg exists no more. This, I take to be rather a figurative expression, as I think that the Baltic has still the pretension to exist. You will, besides, mark the little circumstance, that no landing has been attempted; and that the affair means nothing more than a bombardment. However, the fact, such as it may be, is certainly not without importance. But, in my opinion, it is not the material loss inflicted in the destruction of the works, and of the immense stores of military implements, that makes this event an important one. Such losses, however great, can scarcely influence the issue in this war. The chief importance of the achievement consists in the fact, that it is a new pledge of a protracted war. English publicists think this event brings them a step nearer towards the triumphant conclusion of the war. I am just of this opposite opinion, and believe that it cuts them further off, because, without an adequate change in the policy of the combined Allies, such achievements do not take away strength, neither do they materially affect the political preponderance of Russia; they are just enough to irritate Russia beyond the possibility of conciliation. Diplomacy may strain every nerve to sooth the ominous effect of such a blow; they may go so far as to reduce the conditions of peace, instead of raising the price; the Czar will not agree to anything—he cannot agree to anything, without the prestige of his power restored. It would cost him his throne and his life. His power must be broken or he must vanquish. Such events as the catastrophe of Sweaborg admit of no other alternative. There is something wonderful in this steady progress of the logic of history. It is really providential. Human power struggles in vain against its inexorable decrees. Both the contending parties are forcibly drifted towards the very thing they sought to avoid, viz.: an extension of the area of the conflict, and a war of principles. The contest will be a protracted one; there is now no escape from it; and those elements must come to a participation, which both the contending parties were anxious to keep in fettered inactivity. The nationalities will have to decide the ultimate issue of the war.

I have been asked in America upon what event do the oppressed Nationalities look for an early opportunity to renew the struggle for freedom? In answering the question in one of my speeches, (it was at Syracuse, I believe,) I predicted this contest between Turkey and Russia, and I stated that from the nature of the problem it involves, this contest must necessarily assume a European character. The problem has nothing to do with the comparative merit of Russian Christianity or Turkish Mohametanism—nor with predictions for the one or the other. The descendants of OG-KAN and OSMAN may or may not continue to rule at Constantinople—that is a question comparatively indifferent to the general interests of Europe. The problem is simply this—that, on the one hand, Russia is under the historical necessity of striving to extend her power, at the expense of Turkey, down to the Mediterranean; on the other hand, Western Europe must oppose this; because Turkey absorbed would give such an accession of strength to that absorbing great power, as to make it the master of the destinies of Europe, and with Europe, of the world. It is a mistake to speak of the interest of Europe in the maintenance of the Turkish Empire, such as it is, the interest of Europe, say of the world, requires only (but this is an interest of the utmost importance) that the Turkish Empire be not absorbed by neighboring great powers. This danger once removed, the future condition of European Turkey ceases to be a European question. It may be decomposed into several States—it may be changed to a confederation of distinct nations; the Turks may or may not maintain their supremacy or preponderance among them; none of these possible emergencies implies a danger to the world. But the absorption of Turkey by neighboring powers does.

How is this danger to be prevented? only by surrounding Turkey with such neighbors that whom the danger of such an absorption would at once cease. These neighbors are indicated by geography. They are the Circassians, the Roumains, Poland, Hungary, and the united countries of Dalmatia, Croatia, Sclavonia.

That Circassia and Poland enter into this category is obvious. The Roumains are a necessary element in this combination, because without Bessarabia wrested from Russia, the danger of her immediate neighborhood could not be removed, neither can Bessarabia be either restored to Turkey, or maintain herself alone in an independent condition; but with Moldavia and Wallachia, it will constitute a respectable nationality. The Roumains, from their geographical position, are called on to form the dividing barrier between Russia and Turkey. They alone, however, would be soon absorbed either by Russia or by Austria; therefore, just as the Roumains constituted into an independent nation are an indispensable ingredient in any arrangement calculated to remove the dangerous absorption; just so are a free and independent Hungary and Poland indispensably necessary to the national existence of Moldo-Wallachia.

This is one consideration why the independence of Hungary absolutely enters the solution of the Oriental problem. The second still weightier consideration is, that it is Austria which makes the absorption of the Turkish Empire possible. It is just as with Poland; Turkey can only be absorbed by a partition. Either Russia or Austria alone could be resisted by Turkey; but the combined power of both could not be resisted. Russia knows this well; therefore she always was willing to concede a share to Austria; and Austria was, is and will be always ready to accept it. Hence the danger, and hence it is that if the danger of a Russo-Austrian partition is removed—the danger of absorption is removed. Therefore both Russia and Austria must cease to be the immediate neighbors of Turkey, or else the Oriental problem does not receive such a solution as the interest of the world requires.

Your readers will from these few remarks, understand how the question of nationalities is so intimately connected with the problem involved in the pending contest, that without them a definitive solution is absolutely impossible. Sooner or later they must enter the lists; they must. Had diplomacy succeeded in patching up some miserable four-point peace, the solution might have been adjourned to some future time; but the necessity of it would have infallibly recurred, and whenever it had recurred, the only possible solution would always have remained the same. However, the artifices of diplomacy having failed at Vienna, and events like the bombardment of Sweaborg rendering their early recurrence extremely improbable, there is every reason to anticipate that, in spite of all endeavors to the contrary, the nationalities will yet be called upon to act their part in this very war.

I was led to these remarks by the consideration that notwithstanding the many disappointments, it is utterly repugnant to my feelings to think that in case of such a turn in the character of the pending contest, the great Republic of America, the only representative of one of the two great principles likely to be brought into a life and death struggle, could choose to remain an idle spectator. No, I cannot think the people of the United States so blind as to disregard to such an extent, the imperative conditions of their own future security. Their Government may perhaps preserve the fatal course of improvident indolence, inseparably linked to the history of their present Administration; but of the people, wiser in its instinct and nobler in its impulses, I have a better opinion. However, it rests with them to decide what course they will adopt; mine was the duty of warning them of the probability that an early opportunity for decision is likely to present itself. May a bountiful Providence guide them to a decision, glorious and advantageous to themselves, beneficial to humanity. Forewarned herewith they are. Events will not take them by surprise.

POLITICAL TOPICS.

The Know-Nothing Movement Throughout the Union.

Gen. Cass' Letter—Servility to the South—Alarms about the Union—Atchison, Stringfellow & Co.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Aug. 30, 1855.

While your Know-Nothings are anxiously caboling for the maintenance of their secret organization, I observe that those of Virginia have formally repudiated not only secrecy, but the religious test. It may be remarked that the present is an excellent opportunity for the display of the most enlarged generosity on the part of the Virginia Know-Nothings, inasmuch as they have just parted with the last of their earthly possessions, and cannot be the poorer on giving away the contingent remainder accruing from future expectations.

The Order in New-York musters a force which was hardly anticipated, since their late misfortunes, and displays a vitality calculated to alarm the managers of other organizations.

The work of the reconstruction of broken and dispersed parties through the fusion of fragments, is going on in most of the Northern States. There is one movement which appears to be common to all the States in which elections are about to take place. It is the coalition of Know-Nothings and Silver Gray Whigs, Hard-Shell Democrats and hard drinkers of all parties against the combination opposed to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, the aggressions of the South and the corruptions of the Federal Administration. This coalition expects to succeed in Maine on the 10th September, where the fusion of bad rum with spurious "national" politics has been adjusted with remarkable nicety. The Anti-Maine law men everywhere are rushing to embrace the Nebraskians, and are doing what they can to unite the North in acquiescence to whatever the South may demand.

The letter of Gen. CASS is artfully worded to encourage the Know-Nothings, while he appears to condemn their leading principles. He very well knows that there is nothing left of their platform but the nigger plank, and that is as much his as theirs. The faint censure of their hostility towards immigrants and Catholics, the General knows will pass unheeded.

Upon his own principles, Gen. CASS is a dead politician. He has been a loud and servile detester of the foolish Democratic precept that a Senator was bound to obey the expressed will of his State or resign. His State has nearly unanimously directed him to reverse his course on Nebraska and Slavery. With insolent assurance, he turns around and declares that he scorns the instructions of Abolitionists, though he knows that the Legislature thus offensively stigmatized represents the deliberately formed opinions of three-fourths of the people of Michigan.

The veteran body cannot close his semi-annual manifesto of allegiance to the South without warning the North that unless it sits down silently under the outrages and insults heaped upon the free States, the Union will be dissolved. Who will dissolve it, and by what means starting? If the South means to dissolve the Union, why not gain your freedom upon her? Or perhaps Gen. CASS regards dissolution as a good and desirable thing when attempted by the South, and only unreasonable and damnable when resorted to as a remedy by the North. But the country should observe that nobody in the North is threatening to secede, nor is holding up dissolution as a menace against the South. The cry comes from the South and is echoed by the mercenaries at the North. It is the old story and the old game. A gross and intolerable wrong has been perpetrated on the North; she has been robbed of her territory, and a band of buccaneers, in the employment and pay of the General Government, has forced an odious institution of a hostile section upon one of her fairest provinces—and she protests against the whole scheme of villainy with natural and just indignation. Simultaneously, with one common accord, like beasts in a menagerie at the command of their keeper, ATCHISON CASS, DOUGLASS, HUNT, spring to their feet and send forth one deafening yell against agitation. In the name of the South they demand instant acquiescence, and with silence deep as the grave. The North may go on with its protestations, they add, with frightful calmness, but she should understand the condition of persisting in that aggression upon the South—it is the destruction of the Union by the secession of the South. These men clearly believe that disunion ought to follow resistance to any Southern measure, and in so far they are pestilent disunionists. If disunion is treason, then are they every one of them the most infamous of traitors.

CASS further says, disunion is inevitable unless Northern people cease to abuse and vilify the institutions of the South. Why, how is that? This time-honored servitor of the South cannot be ignorant that the most rancorous abuse of the North, its people and institutions, is very common throughout the South, and he has even often silently sat by and heard it poured out by the hour together by his associates in the Senate. Why did he not rebuke the slanderers and warn them that they would drive the North to secede from the Union? But if Mr. CASS and his confederates for the diffusion of Slavery over the whole continent, believe disunion to be so imminent as they pretend; and if they think it would injure only the North and benefit the South, they can escape the inevitable evil and reap their full share of the promised good by escaping to the southward of Mason and Dixon while it is yet time. No honest man would regret their departure.

It is also in character that, at the very moment when the South has carried every point, and enforced demands unparalleled for their extent, BENJAMIN, TOOMBS & Co. should commence intriguing for the formation of a Southern sectional party to secure the perpetration of yet further wrongs and indignities upon the North. In the same spirit the Democratic organ of Virginia advises the raising of a standing army of 20,000 men for operations against the North.

The time is indeed propitious for raising the periodical howl of disunion, and with innumerable precedents before us, the country has no cause whatever to be astonished at the sublimated impudence of CASS and DICKINSON, BENJAMIN and TOOMBS, in threatening that it will be accomplished by the secession of the South.

KNOW-NOTHINGISM IN NEW-YORK.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

BINGHAMTON, Friday, Aug. 31, 1855.

How often do public speakers utter great truths, and never dream of the application which their hearers are making. "There is a point beyond which no combination can venture without a dangerous and often destructive reaction." These were CHAUNCEY SCHAFFER's words to the people of Broome, and he illustrated by examples the truth of the maxim. Did it never occur to the speaker that the truth of his sentence was acknowledged by his audience before the words were cold on his lips, and that all citations of facts were a waste of words? The evidence was before his hearers in the ranks of the very party under whose auspices they were assembled. It was evidenced as well in the sparse attendance as in the entire absence of anything approaching enthusiasm in those present.

One short year ago a call for such a meeting, made but an hour in advance, would have crowded these streets from one end to the other, and not the shadow of all the buildings in the place would have served to keep the sun's rays from the multitude that would have rallied to hear proclamation made of the principles upon which SAM proposed to take the stump. They would have come from the hill-sides far and near, from the broad valleys like a host. Not the bugle blast of DEU could have found a more enthusiastic or ready response than would have greeted the announcement that the Grand Council was to sit with open doors in the village of Binghamton.

But what a change! For a whole week there could be read on every corner the announcement that the American party of Broome would have a mass meeting on the 29th inst., with such a brilliant array of speakers as was seldom before congregated hereabouts.

And the result. All told, the young and the old, native and foreign, friend and foe, stranger and citizen, men and women and children—all counted, and there did not twelve hundred persons stand before the speakers. And the village of Binghamton numbers near ten thousand inhabitants within its corporate limits, and the Grand Council of the State was there, and the County Court was in session, and all that had the interest or the curiosity to hear or to see were within the shade of Bingham Hall—and the shade at 3 o'clock was even far beyond the outer line of people.

Did not friend SCHAFFER see in this the force of his truism? Did he not realize that in the departure from the principles first preached by the Order, in the attempt to pervert and make binding obligations which when taken had another and a different meaning—that in seeking to take charge of the consciences of men, and dictating for whom and for what they should vote—that by their midnight conclaves and efforts to control the free thoughts of the people—the so-called American combination has reached "a dangerous and destructive reaction?" He must have felt it there, as he stood in public before the hundreds that should have been thousands—he must have felt it when by alarm, and password and sign, he had gained admittance to the secret conclave, and found less than two hundred representatives, though twelve hundred were entitled to admission. If not to him, to all careful observers must have been evident the practical application of his own sentence. "And so, good night to MANNION."

Among a wide circle of people whom I have had the pleasure of meeting here and hereabouts, I find a strong sense given to the proposed Republican combination. If the Convention of the 26th of September, does its whole duty—acts regardless of old party distinctions, and puts in nomination men truthfully and ably representing the marked issues of the day, there is no doubt of the result. In Broome it would not only receive a large vote, but a decided and overwhelming majority.

I notice but little attention is given here to the enforcement of the law for the suppression of intemperance. Almost all the delegates to the Hindoo Convention came prepared for any such emergency as a stoppage of the supplies. But their precautions were useless. "Original packages" are accessible at from three to twelve and a half cents per glass, to day and all persons. When the law first became operative, an attempt was made to enforce its penalties, but the course of the County Judge, Mr. DICKINSON, was such as to render abortive any efforts which the friends of the measure were willing to make. He would not even permit the $10 penalty for intoxication to be imposed. In the example made to enforce the law much bad feeling was engendered—the evidence of which is, I fear, to be a permanent reproach to the citizens of Binghamton. Some of the most beautiful residences in the village are owned by gentlemen who have felt it to be their duty to complain of persons engaged in the liquor traffic. One morning the magnificent shade trees standing in the yards of three gentlemen who had made themselves thus obnoxious, were found girdled—the work evidently of some miserable wretches who had been emboldened by the very course, the only of which their employers had sought or probably. Of course, efforts were made by the citizens to ascertain the names of those guilty of this cowardly outrage, but none has yet been discovered. The owners hope, by the application of burnt plasterers and close attention to watering and culture, to save their trees, but I hardly think they will be successful. In one door-yard I noticed several trees thus girdled, that could only have at most their days and barely therefore many years of careful cultivation.

The beautiful location of Binghamton, and the energy and enterprise which have made it one of the most wealthy and thriving of our inland villages, are so well known that I may but briefly add my testimony to the "truth of history." To the kind and courteous attentions of one of its most respectable and enterprising citizens, WILLIAM MORRIS, Esq., I am indebted for many favors, not the least of which was the opportunity to make personal examination of the village proper, and of its beautiful picturesque environs. An intelligent and well-informed chaperon, a noble horse and an easy carriage, are perhaps auspicious under which it is not possible to form a disinterested opinion; but making allowances for all these, I still think nature and man have here made one of the loveliest rural villages that I ever made note of.

P. S.—The man who saw the Silver Lake serpent has gone home, highly delighted with the platform. He says it is so well manned together that the best expert in platform building could not find the joints. He wants new to catch the snake. Some people think the Silver Gray and Hunker monster, which he has swallowed whole, should satisfy him.

The Harvest and Crops in Great Britain.

From the London Daily News, Aug. 14.

The harvest moon has brought harvest weather—all that was needed to secure as large a crop as, perhaps, ever stood on the soil of England. Ten days or a fortnight ago reaping was commenced in a few localities, but it only became general on Monday. Then—the first day of the new moon, which began her reign under the most favorable auspices—almost every farmer of England turned his reapers into his wheat fields, and began the great work of gathering in the bread of the people. Every person who has seen the wheat standing on the ground, and takes the trouble to examine it, is, we believe, satisfied that this year's harvest, with a continuation of the weather which has now so auspiciously set in, will be very little short of the last harvest. Even in those places where the corn has been laid—which constitute only a small part of the whole wheat lands—a continuation of the splendid weather of the last few days will enable the farmers to reap or mow the whole, and save the produce, though it be dark in color and deficient in quality. What the plant may yield of flour, when threshed and ground, even the most experienced cannot foretell, but personal observation over a large tract of country, personal examination of many fields, and communication with many well-informed landlords, farmers and laborers, entitle us to say that the clavicles in the wheat ear never were larger, and that the crop on the ground has been rarely, if ever, on the whole, finer. The harvest of last year was one of the most abundant on record. This year the harvest in the North has begun almost as early as the harvest in the South, and, taking the country throughout, including the increased breadth of land sown with wheat, and the present probability of its being all well got in, there is good reason to hope that the harvest of 1855 will be on the whole as abundant as the harvest of 1854.

From the Gazette returns to the latest date, August 4, we learn that the quantity of wheat, our own produce, sold in the market towns of England and Wales, from October 1, 1854, was 4,500,238 qrs. against 3,183,812 qrs. in the same period of the previous year, or nearly three-sevenths greater. Assuming the whole crop, as well as the quantity sold in the towns, to be in the same excess, though this is not likely, and assuming the total average quantity grown to be 13,000,000 qrs., we are entitled to conclude that the wheat crop of England and Wales was last year 5,000,000 qrs. larger than in 1853. Saying that the excess was only 3,500,000 qrs., deducting thereof the 1,500,000 qrs. as exclusively sold in towns, and having no corresponding consumption or sale in the rural districts, this quantity will be more than two-thirds of the average importation of wheat and flour—5,243,625 qrs. in the three years 1851-1853. Assuming that we have this year a harvest equal or nearly equal to that of 1854—as we know that from the beginning of last August to the commencement of the present month we have imported, of wheat and flour together, about 3,700,000 qrs.—we shall want probably for our supply next year, not 6,235,000 qrs. as in 1853, but only the smaller quantity of 3,700,000 qrs. Notwithstanding bad harvests abroad, and notwithstanding the war, we obtained the necessary supply without much difficulty. This year the harvests are comparatively abundant in France, Spain, Italy and Germany—they are very abundant in the United States. Russia has found it necessary to remove the prohibition to export corn; and though none of her produce may come hither directly, it will go into Austria, Italy, Spain and other countries, and cause the native produce to be shipped hither. Our present prospects, therefore, with a good harvest at home and good harvests abroad, are much more favorable than they were at this time last year. Then our own harvest promised well, but then the harvests abroad were extremely bad; and we have had, through the whole of the present year, to compete with other nations in foreign markets for a diminished quantity of corn.

What the London Times Has Done.

From the Literary Gazette.

It was the Times, as the leading organ of the press, which hurried the feeble and wavering Government into the Crimean expedition, without sufficient knowledge of the place, and with inadequate preparation for its capture. It was the Times which previously had bullied the Ministry, anxious to gain public favor, into the appointment of Lord HARDINGE as successor to the Duke of WELLINGTON, instead of Lord RAGLAN, who was far better qualified for the business duties of Commander-in-Chief at home, and thus led to his being sent to the East at a time of life when he was unequal to active and energetic service. It was the Times which, through its being under the influence of certain great capitalists involved in financial affairs at Vienna, deluded this country with the treacherous alliance of Austria. The Times has throughout the war, irritated the Americans, maligned the Italians, discouraged the Poles and done all in its power to alienate the Hungarians, the noblest people of Europe, with a warlike population twice that of England in the great war of Chatham. To claim merit now for saving the remains of the army before Sebastopol, is what might be done by those who first scuttled a ship, and then boasted how many lives they saved from the wreck.

Romance of War.

"I know," writes a Crimean correspondent, "that in England a great number of young ladies believe the 'tented field' to be surrounded with romance, and some older people fancy, perhaps from their experience of cricket matches, layings of foundation stones and flower shows, that a tent is a cool, airy, and desirable Summer residence. I like popular delusions—they make a great many good people happy and contented—but feel exasperated by this one in particular, and wish the public was encamped out here for about three days. I should like to see them on their backs on the ground, panting like hard-pressed stags, watching the grass drying up before their eyes, the haze rising from the glassy surface of the sea, the air like the air of a bake-house, and darkened by millions of flies, which break the awful noontide silence by a confused hum and buz, and would settle on their nose and ears with maddening pertinacity—the water hot, the ground hot, wine hot, beer hot, boxes hot, bed hot, writing impossible, reading impossible—nothing to do but to wait and to suffer. And when at last the evening came and they stepped out to breathe—the thermometer, after all, would only have fallen about ten degrees, and dinner would be ready—to see them too sleepy and too exhausted to eat, and then go to bed just to pass a hot uncomfortable night, and get up in the morrow, would afford me melancholy pleasure."

Balloon Dresses.

The ladies dresses are ballooning out to such an enormous size in Paris, that we are informed that the following colloquy took place in the gardens of the Tuileries, where it is the custom to charge a sou for every chair that is used. Chairwoman—"Madame has made a mistake—she has paid me only one sou." Lady—"Yes, my good woman—I have occupied only one chair." Chairwoman—"That is true—but there were two other chairs—one on each side of Madame, for the accommodation of Madame's dress, and that makes three sous." Lady—"Three sous! But it's scandalous!" Chairwoman—"Far from that I can assure you, Madame, that a lady only yesterday paid five sous for the use of five chairs, and her dress, I am sure, was by no means so fashionable as Madame's." "The three sous are paid consently, and Madame rises, displaying as she retires the utmost breadth of her dress, which may be described, without any exaggeration, as being quite as broad as it is long.)

Artistic Anachronisms.

The following are a few artistic anachronisms: TINTORET drew Jews in the wilderness; with guns. BRONZINO, a Dutch painter, drew one of the Magi in a cuirassier and spurs, presenting Christ with a model of a Dutch seventy-four. PAUL VERONESE drew Benedictines at the feast in Cassana. Another drew one of the thieves with a confessor holding a cross. In a college chapel at Paris was a picture of NAPOLEON and his aid-de-camps visiting a plague hospital. When the Bourbons came back this was altered to CHARLEMAGNE and his Apostles; but the Christ has no NAPOLEON's body to this day. A statue of CHARLES II., erected at the Old Stock Market (present site of the Mansion-house) had been originally made for SOBIESKI, with a Turk under the horse. The Turk was changed into OLIVER CROMWELL, only his turban was forgotten.

Last Moments of a Russian Admiral.

A letter in the Gazette Militaire, giving an account of the last moments of Admiral NACHIMOFF, at Sebastopol, says: "Conscious that his end was approaching, he turned to the seamen by his side, and said, 'My children, never forget to hoist the ensign (i. e., the ensign of the Russian flag of war) at the mainmast in presence of the enemy, as you did at Sinope.' The death of NACHIMOFF has put the garrison of Sebastopol, and especially the seamen, by whom he was adored, to despair. General KRIGOLEFF, who rivals him in intrepidity, uttered these words as they placed him in the coffin: 'Mountains of enemies corpses, brave seaman, shall be thy monument!' 'De-bader ish!' (Let it be so,) shouted the regiment, who assisted at the funeral ceremony."

A Prophetic Song.

The following is from a soldier's letter printed by the Kilmarnock Chronicle: "The other night I was on the entrenchments, and a good number of us were sitting together amusing ourselves. One was singing a song called 'Mary weep no more for me,' in which occur these beautiful lines—

Far, far from thee I sleep in death,
So, Mary, weep no more for me, when a shell came in and burst among us, and killed the man while he was singing the song. I never was so vexed for any one in my life; it opened his skull completely, and he died in an instant."

The Two Generals.

After the termination of the battle of Inkerman, Lord RAGLAN went to visit General BOSQUET. "General," he said to him, "you do not appear satisfied, and yet no one has more cause for intense gratification on the results of to-day than yourself." "My Lord," replied the General, "I do not feel that intense gratification, for the simple reason that this is a fortunate battle instead of a victory. Three hours were lost in orders and counter-orders, and different instructions; and this must always be the case while the Commander-in-Chief is in several hands, and that one decision alone has no weight in the balance."

Attempt to Commit Rape in Petersburg.

The Petersburg Intelligencer of Saturday gives the following particulars of an attempt to commit rape, near that city, last Thursday morning: On Thursday morning last, near the ROSLIN estate in Chesterfield County, and within sight of the dwellings in that neighborhood, a most daring, but, fortunately, unsuccessful attempt was made by a negro man to violate the person of Mrs. DASSONVILLE, a respectable French lady, whose husband is in the employ of the Roslin Brick Company. Mrs. D. was returning alone from the market in this city with her market-basket on her arm. When she reached Pocahontas Bridge, she observed, standing on the bridge, a stout, well-dressed negro man who eyed her very closely as she passed, and after she had proceeded but a short distance, started in the same direction. Mrs D. observed him following not far behind her, but not suspecting that he had any intention of molesting her, she continued to proceed without paying any very particular attention to his manœuvres, and soon lost sight of him, he having, as she supposed, gone up the Railroad which crosses the Roslin road not far beyond the bridge. When, however, she had reached that part of the road which leads in the direction of the Roslin Brick Works, he made his appearance again, having crossed a cornfield, instead of following the road which leads around it; for the purpose, no doubt, of intercepting Mrs. D. as well as to elude her observation. Before he reached the road Mrs. D. had passed, but he walked rapidly on until he overtook her, when he commenced interrogating her as to where she was going, &c. They had not proceeded far before he advanced upon Mrs. D., and seizing her by the throat, threw her to the ground and attempted to outrage her person, threatening at the same time that if she made any noise he would kill her. She endeavored to scream, but the scoundrel had his hand clasped so tightly upon her throat that she was prevented from giving any alarm. She continued to struggle, and at last managed to release herself sufficiently from his grasp to be able to utter a shriek, which was fortunately heard by Mrs. BOND, with whom Mr. and Mrs. D. are boarding, and quickly brought the lady to her assistance. Before Mrs. B. reached the spot, however, the negro, becoming alarmed, had made his escape, and concealed himself, probably, in the cornfield adjacent. When the assault was made upon Mrs. D., she was within seventy-five or eighty yards of her residence. Mrs. D. is quite young and of prepossessing appearance. Although the choking which she received was so severe as to produce a hemorrhage, we are glad to be able to state that her injuries are not considered dangerous.

The perpetrator of the diabolical outrage, we are gratified to learn, was arrested yesterday afternoon, taken before Mrs. DASSONVILLE, recognized by her and lodged in jail. His name is JOE CORLING. He is the property of CHARLES CORLING, Esq., of this city, and has been employed for some time as a cook at the restaurant of Mr. MARK BLITZ. We understand that he will be taken out to Roslin this morning, in order to undergo an examining trial, when we presume he will be committed to Chesterfield County Jail.

Curious Adultery Case.

From the Hartford Times, Aug. 31.

Those who have been in the habit of reading our reports of the doings of the Police Court, will feel interested to hear more of the story connected with the prosecution for adultery, which was reported yesterday. The history of the parties in this case is, to say the least, somewhat romantic. Oliver Wolcott, of Avon, claims to have married in August, 1826, Lucy Ann French, in the town of Harwinton. The swain at that time was 37 years of age, and the damsel but 14. (She is but 31 years old now, and has a married daughter! A fast family that.) Mr. Wolcott did not remember who married him, or what the man's name was, and had never seen him before that time nor since. He lived with his wife for several years, and had a family of four children. Last Winter, Salmon D. Case, of Unionville, a youth of 24 years of age, was in the habit of frequently visiting Wolcott's family, for the ostensible purpose of "courting" Wolcott's daughter. But his visits continuing after this daughter had gone away, and there being considerable intimacy between Wolcott's wife and Case, Wolcott began to smell a rat, or something equally strong, and was somewhat troubled. About this time Case made a proposition to Wolcott to sell him his young wife, and the wife was willing to be sold. Wolcott declined doing anything of this sort, and advised Case to keep away from his house, as "he was afraid he would make trouble in the family!" Shortly after, Lucy Ann left her husband, went to her father's house in Canaan, and, as her father says, about this time Case came there to work for him. About the last of April, Case and Mrs. Wolcott started on a pleasure tour and brought up somewhere in Otsego County, New-York. Case went to work for a man there, who, either based on his every absent behavior and his wife's conduct, thought the girl married, which they did. Meanwhile Wolcott came to the same place, and found Case and Mrs. Wolcott living together as man and wife. He went into the room at night where they were sleeping together and "had some words" with Case, and persuaded her to go with him on his return home. Wolcott hired out to the same man with whom Case and Lucy Ann were living at that time, and for a time lived together peaceably, sleeping in the same room. Case and Wolcott would have a fight occasionally, and Lucy Ann would sometimes side with the latter against her husband. One night, after Wolcott was asleep, Case and Lucy Ann retired to parents Wolcott to get papers drawn and signed, giving up his wife to Case. They went to various places together in the town, and Lucy Ann stopped lovingly on the same seat with Wolcott, sitting by Chauncey on a back seat. Occasionally the latter would remonstrate with the former on the impropriety of their conduct. At Albany, Wolcott was taken ill, and Case let him have enough to come on with alone. They came to Spring field, and went to the same boarding-house. Case and Lucy Ann sleeping together, and Wolcott alone. The next day the sole went to a lawyer, and there told their story. Before they left, that lawyer had drawn papers, one in which Wolcott agreed to give up the place of his wife as a chambermaid to Case; in the other, Case agreed to furnish Wolcott with clothes, furniture, &c., to pay for the entire support of one child, and contribute to his personal gratification for life, and other things. These papers were signed and sealed by either, and duly witnessed by the attending individual, who drew them up. Then they came to this city, where they gathered in the town, and Case gave the landlord of the hotel a hint that Wolcott was his wife, and that he was a jealous fellow. Wolcott was arrested on the charge of adultery, and Case was the complainant. Case was in the room, and Wolcott was in the house, when the officer came to take him. Case was not to be found. He had left the house, and was on his way to the station, and he went out on the cars toward New-Britain, with them. The next proceeding to the women's father's house in Canaan, and Wolcott came back to this city, and made the complaint against Case (and not his wife) which has been mentioned before Judge Collier. There was some interesting testimony about the room, among which was the following, which other witnesses on the part of the defense, to impeach Wolcott's character for truth and veracity—the witness being Lucy Ann's father.

AWAKING OF SPANISH.

The following amusing sketches are from the correspondence of the St. Louis Democrat, under date of Aug. 19:

Hitherto, I have been too busy to continue the sketches of Kansas Legislators on the floor. I shall try to sometimes throw in exceptions, if I have any time to arrange them in groups.

LEGISLATORS ON THE SLOPE.

Mr. McMURTRY is a steady fellow, [illegible] either fighting looking, fair complexioned, [illegible] 22 years old, but younger in appearance. He never [illegible] action; but, unlike the majority of other [illegible] he always original, and always speaks to the point. When I say he is strong-acting, I don't mean that he looks like a prophet or a "prophet," [illegible] wise, but a man who has the stuff in him that [illegible] are made of. He is our best speaker of Yankee [illegible]. His remarks are called forth by [illegible] by because they are morbidly individual; nobody but Mr. McMURTRY would express his opinions just in the way he does. He has no decided [illegible] to say what he really thinks in [illegible] and vigorous language. His remarks are strong, but they are never mere repetitions of common sentiment. He dresses in light colored clothes and wears a [illegible] waistcoat without vest or cravat. Among other virtues, he keeps the best humor in the Hall, and is not averse to "hooking" a friend. [illegible] have written on his back—" As a man, he never gave the Devil more than twenty;" as a legislator, he never spoke during a session of Congress." Mr. McMURTRY drinks a decoction of "oil" in Mediterranean whisky.

Mr. WHITLOCK, I conceive, is the [illegible] of one class of the [illegible] of Kansas. He speaks very frequently, and his choice and [illegible] remind one somewhat of the dandy Beau of the fire-[illegible] LEY MURRAY, and cuts the [illegible] of Arkansas [illegible] "Very rude of them not" he once shrewd or [illegible]. The great center of Atchison he calls Brummagem. To use his own language he is "down" on Abolitionists and Free Soilers. Physically, he is a fine [illegible] man. He often laughs very heartily, and his choice and [illegible] or sincere laughter by his "fat friends" [illegible] expectation to, or advocacy of bills. I [illegible] more one of his speeches as a specimen of his oratory:

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not by and heard the gentleman and [illegible] of Lawrence, and I have not heard a very good and [illegible] word. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is very [illegible]; it is tolerable, for gentlemen to vote against me. The gentleman from ——

Here Mr. W. was called to order by the Speaker, and I was prevented from hearing the peroration of this noble speech.

From these few extracts, the peculiar and very style of the honorable member from Lawrence, may be guessed at by the critical reader. He is the [illegible] of the Shawnee Company, and is decidedly a character.

LEGISLATORS PRAYING.

At noon it was announced that Judge Lecompte would give a solution to the Legislature for the honor they conferred on him by [illegible] the capital of the territory. At 1 o'clock, the Legislature, with new [illegible] best dinner ever spread on Journeyman's tables were [illegible] taken of by honorable members and your still more honorable reporter. After the "bottle" had been gravely discussed, the champagne bottles were opened, and as each gallant bottle with sparkling disappeared, the brave soldiers bowed the walls of Sebastopol, the [illegible] and humanity of the Territorial Council [illegible] FRANK RANKLAR, and others were [illegible] to address the "most-cooled" audience. FRANK [illegible] "RAHS! RAHS!" thrown enthusiastically and [illegible] a dozen.

Mr. RAHS arose, and after a few moments [illegible] a dozen tumblers of champagne have vanished [illegible] the tablets of my memory, proposed this sentiment:

Our Worthy Friend Chief Justice Lecompte—May his [illegible] be [illegible] and his shadow never [illegible] the shadow of death. [illegible] heard his name, shall mention it into [illegible].

Judge LECOMPTE replied in a few brief and appropriate remarks.

Judge ELMORE spoke next and proposed a toast, but as I was drinking a destruction to DAVY ATCHISON in the bowl, I did not hear what it was.

I cared "I'm in a [illegible] and wanted [illegible] again. Everybody heard it. Common sentiment compelled them to join me. Ex-Governor REEDER [illegible] and made the best speech of the occasion, as every one [illegible] listening [illegible] from the moment he rose till he returned his seat. He told a couple of good stories very humorously.

Mr. BROWN, on being called for, proposed ——

Judge ELMORE: When a person we never sought his [illegible] when the [illegible] power is not on him [illegible] Lord [illegible] followed this [illegible].

Judge ELMORE rose and gracefully thanked the [illegible] for their sympathy, and expressed his determination [illegible] then to resist President PIERCE's usurpation of power.

I remember no more, except that I went out and told down on the sidewalk from the great [illegible], of course, —and awoke at 5 o'clock.

Legislative Proceedings—Meeting Territorial Officers.

SHAWNEE MISSION, Friday, Aug. 31—4 P. M.

EDITOR OF THE DEMOCRAT: There has been a great deal of excitement and discussion in the Legislature here for some days past in regard to the proposed Bank bill, and quite an angry feeling has been aroused thereby. On Saturday at a late hour the bill was finally defeated.

The bill in regard to electing all Territorial officers by the greatest Legislature has become a law, and the two Houses are now in joint session for the purpose of carrying out the election. The list of county officers to be filled under the provisions of the bill is not [illegible] for insertion. The following is the result so far as [illegible] to-day: FIRST DISTRICT, CHARLES SCHERMERHORN; Second District, H. A. HUTCHINSON; Third District, JOHN B. BLAKY.

From this it will be seen that the bill whereby the Kansas Solons enacted that all offices in the Territory, for the term of six years running, should be filled by the present Legislature has become a law; and the old Dem- [illegible] by any that a more infamous invasion of the rights of any people, a more unwarrantable assumption of power not delegated, was never perpetrated by any assembly that ever sat in even revolutionary France. Not content with legislating themselves into office in violation of the FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western brands are filled still greater firmness and buoyant, there being more enquiry to-day, while the terms and export demand is limited. The day's sales add up 7,000 bbls., within our revised range:

GRAIN—Wheat is inactive and limited, with sales of only about 10,000 bushels Southern at $1 00@$1 06 for white, and $1 10@$1 08 for Red, $ bushel. Rye is doing better; 500 bushels brought $1 10@$1 10 $ bushel. Barley has not varied. Corn—Canal and Western Corn are nominal, and prentable at 80c. 80c. $ bushel. Corn is heavy, but not varied materially in exchange—the day's business consisting of 40,000 bushels inferior to choice Western Mixed, at 80c.@80c. $ bushel.

HAY—Rules about the same.

HEMP—We have nothing particularly new to notice under this head.

HOPS—Are in fair request, but not at prices to suit sewers, who, however, are becoming more anxious to receive. This day's sales have been unimportant, and prices have remained unsettled.

WOOL—Is generally more inquired for, at the previous full rates. This morning's Philadelphia North American says, in reference to the Iron business of that city during the past week, that "American Bars have been in sufficient demand throughout the Union to command full prices and give full employment to our mills. Stocks of Pigs Fig are much reduced, and the demand for foundry Iron is stimulating its production; furnaces lately idle are beginning to blast, and several new ones are in course of erection. As our mills are making full time, and the demand for railway casting must be commensurate with the orders for rails given abroad and at home, we may reasonably expect a healthy market for American Rig for some time to come. The Iron Rolled in Big Island have been less than the average for the season, during the last week, though there was more than usual inquiry. Prices have advanced; sales of two lots No. 1, each 100 tons, were made at $[illegible]. Ordinary brands are selling at $27; No. 2 at $[illegible] to $[illegible], and Forge at $[illegible] to $[illegible], $ ton. Aggregate sales, 2,650 tons American Bars and Rods, and a few small sales were made at our advance quotations, $70 to $75, $ ton, $ quality and size. Total sales 600 tons. American Rails have advanced, and one lot at $[illegible], cash. Other descriptions of Iron are on last prices."

LEAD—Is unsettled.

LIME—Sales slowly at old rates. The stock is limited.

MOLASSES—Only 100 bbls. New-Orleans changed hands at 37c. $ gal.

NAVAL STORES—Crude Turpentine is dull and heavy, at lower quoted. Spirits do. seems in improved request at the sales. $ gal., but is held higher. Tar and Pitch are unaltered.

OILS—Nothing really new has occurred in this line since our last.

PROVISIONS—Pork is doing better, the day's sales amounting to 1,500 bbls. at $22 37½@$23 50 for new Mess and $19 50 for Prime, $ bbl. Our Western advices say they are firm and unsettled in price. Lard is unchanged; the day's sales include 300 bbls. and tcs. fair to prime, at 11½@11c. $ lb. Beef appears about the same; 500 bbls. were disposed of during the day at $11 for Prime; $11 75@$12 for Country Mess; $15 75@16 25 for repacked Mess, and $17 for extra. do., $ bbl. Prime Mess Beef is in stock demand within a range of from [illegible] $ tc. Beef Hams remain inactive and irregular, at from $15@16 $ bbl. Butter is in demand at 14@17c. for Ohio; 17c.@21c. for ordinary to good State, and 21c.@25c. for choice do., $ lb. Cheese is selling at from 8½@10c. $ lb.

prices will materially advance about the close of the month.

Our stock of Fleece Wool is large and offers a fair selection. Of Pulled wool we have but little other than Superfine. Prices remain as before.

With foreign Wool transactions have been firm and quietly, the sales of 3 large lots, and notwithstanding offers of full rates, holders are not disposed to accept higher prices than many buyers is but little influence. Accounts from the manufacturers that the high prices of Wool are not warranted by the sale of their fabrics, they answer that prices of goods must advance even more. The imports of Wool continue much, and some kinds and qualities are no more in our market. From London we have to report the last sales taken, which consisted of 76,150 bales Australian and Cape, 6,000 bales East India, 4,375 bales Foreign,—in all 86,525 bales.

The Silk and Foreign tariffs were very numerous, and the sales went off with much spirit. In the beginning the advance above the prices of last May went as high as 5d. $ lb. for the best conditioned and good kinds, but later it moderated, and the advance established on the whole is counted at 12. $ lb. only. Foreign imports took about 30,000 bales, of which the most was for Germany.

England received last year from Australia and the Cape, 176,121 bales, and will very likely receive this year about 200,000 bales, taking the ordinary fluctuations. We do not, therefore, that these two Colonies alone provide England with about the same quantity of fine and middling fine Wool, as the whole United States ship produces. Besides, we know of direct shipments of Wool from Australia and the Cape to the Continent of Europe and to this country. The West-germans there are much ahead of ours.

Of low Wools, East India alone advanced ½d. All other kinds realized the prices of the last sales; but Buenos Ayres and Peruvian neglected.

As far as the account of this year's crop, with us and abroad, will allow us to form an opinion, they are considered as average ones, and this fortunate circumstance, accompanied by the good state of the Money market, indicate fair prospects for the future in business generally, and skin branch in particular.

The Fall transactions do not come up to our expectations, but prices of fabrics have for the most part advanced, though not sufficiently to encourage the manufacturers. The feeling is for a further rise, but more a gradual than a sudden one.

COUNTY BONDS FOR SALE.—Proposals will be received and addressed to the undersigned, at the office of C. E. MILLER & CO., Auctioneers, No. 186 Broadway, New-York, until the 20th day of September, for the purchase of the whole or part of $200,000 of the six per cent. Coupon Bonds of Davidson County, State of Tennessee. Proposals may be for cash, or for 20 per cent. cash, and balance in monthly installments of five per ten per cent.

These Bonds are issued to the Nashville and Northwestern Railroad Company in conformity to a special act of the Legislature, which act provides for the assessment and collection of a special tax for payment of interest, and to create a sinking fund for their final payment. The tax for the current year is now being collected.

These Bonds offer superior inducements to capitalists. The County, embracing the City of Nashville, is the wealthiest in the State—the taxable property amounting to twenty-one millions dollars, and the system of Railroads now being constructed, will, when completed, increase that amount largely.

For further information may be obtained by applying at the office of C. E. MILLER & CO., No. 186 Broadway; or, by addressing the subscribers, at Nashville, Tenn.

MRS. BROWN'S BOARDING

NEW-YORK: MONDAY, SEPT. 3.

HARPER AND BROS.

[illegible] Kossuth, Florence, Italy, is agent [illegible] TIMES. Single copies can be procured on application in Rome.

Kossuth Again.

Ex-Gov. Kossuth, in a letter from the Isle of Wight, which will be found in another column, answers the question which is frequently asked—how the present war can [illegible] the nationalities of Europe be [illegible] the contest for their rights. He expresses the opinion that the war cannot be ended by victories over the Czar, because to make peace under such circumstances would cost him his throne, if not his life. The great object of the war—so far as it concerns itself with the interest of Europe—is to render it impossible for any one great Power to absorb Turkey. This danger will always exist while any great Power—either Russia or Austria—is left in the immediate neighborhood of Turkey. Whether peace, therefore, be now made on other conditions or not, there can be no permanent settlement of this question until new nationalities shall be created out of Hungary, Poland and the Danubian Provinces, as a barrier against the absorption of Turkey. This is his view of the question, and sets forth the grounds on which he anticipates from the war, sooner or later, as a necessary result, an opportunity again to contend for the independence of his country.

We observe that, in referring to Kossuth's account of his interview with Mr. Webster and to the views expressed by the latter concerning our European relations, the National Intelligencer takes occasion to say that "the Boston Advertiser, which is edited by a relative of Mr. Everett, has no faith in the Hungarian Governor's veracity"—and it then quotes the following paragraph from the Advertiser in regard to Kossuth's statement:

"We shall not comment on this statement, at present, any further than to say that we do not believe a word of it. There is nothing in conversation, a belief that Mr. Webster used such language as Mr. Kossuth [illegible] be found in any of his writings or authenticated speeches."

It seems that a paper edited by a relative of Mr. Everett has no faith in Kossuth's veracity; and the Intelligencer quotes that statement, as a very convenient mode of intimating its own incredulity. If either a "relative of Mr. Everett," or the Intelligencer, have any good reason for impeaching Kossuth's veracity, they would do quite right in setting it before the public. But the naked insinuation, unsustained by any fact,—the offspring, apparently, of prejudice rather than reason,—does no credit to either of the parties who permit themselves to make it. Whatever his "relative" may do, we venture to say that Mr. Everett himself would never so far forget what is due to a gentleman of Kossuth's position,—though unfortunate and an exile,—as to utter groundless and insulting imputations upon his personal character.

It is not easy, indeed, to discover any adequate explanation of the rancor with which even respectable persons, like the Editors of the two papers named, pursue ex-Governor Kossuth in his exile. That he is a scholar of rare acquirements, a statesman of large experience in public affairs, a writer of great ability, an orator of rarely rivaled power, every man who knows anything of his history and character readily concedes. That he enjoyed the love and the confidence of his countrymen to a degree rarely equaled by any man in any nation,—that he was raised by them to positions of vast power,—that he used that power always for what he believed to be their welfare, and in accordance with political principles which every Republican must approve, are facts of historical record, and unimpeached. That he fell with his country—that he was crushed by the same outrage power which trod her independence and the rights of her people in the dust—that he lost everything in her service and became an exile from her and for his devotion to her welfare, is also true and undisputed. One would think that these things, with every generous man, would give him a claim to respect, sympathy, and, whenever it might be needed, to the large and most tolerant charity. Grant that he committed an error in deceiving himself even after exile, still at liberty to watch for fortunes and care for the fate of his beloved country,—in not folding his arms and shutting his eyes and stifling his voice, and decaying in obscurity, as exiles probably should be content to do,—but in holding to his mission and deeming his cause not lost so long as it had a claim on human sympathy, and in striving to make that claim heard and heeded by the nations professing to love liberty and to hate oppression. Grant that, in coming to this country ignorant of its people and its institutions, he fell into the mistake of supposing they would listen sympathizingly to his suggestions, and judge what he might say and do from his point of view, and not from their own positions, views or interests, still, less from their paltry self-conceits and personal jealousies,—grant that it was highly and inexcusably audacious in him to proceed to any knowledge of our history, and our duties and our interests, in their relation to the principles of human liberty, or to the cause of popular freedom throughout the world,—Grant all this, and whatever more has been urged against him,—we can still see in it all no adequate motive for the bitterness and envenomed malice of the crusade which has been waged against him.

The Intelligencer, though always among the more decorous of American journals, has been of the document of his enemies. Its right to differ from his views,—to censure his [illegible] and his conduct as we may [illegible] his charge. It is not called upon to "lend its columns to minister to his vanity," and it is entirely free to set up for him a standard of action which the public man in this country as any other could ever reach, and to denounce his cause and his sentiments on public chairs, because it suppose him of having "more at heart his own aggrandisement, in his unceasing efforts to revolutionize Austria, than the liberties or happiness of his countrymen." There never yet lived a public man who could not be suspected of selfishness,—none who have not been subjected to precisely this imputation. Perhaps Kossuth has deserved it more than Washington or Clay or Calhoun. But we do not see how even this supposition should properly nullify all his labors, and be used to bolster the despotism which crushes the thirteen millions of his people. We can easily understand how the agents and myrmidons of Austria would make use of this, and of every other paltry prejudice and whispered slander, to weaken the influence of one who offers a relentless and undying hostility to her oppressive and tyrannical rule. But we confess our surprise at the eagerness of American journals to make themselves their accomplices in such an effort.

The City Funds.

The Sunday Atlas of yesterday makes a quotation from Mayor Wood's first Message, which possesses peculiar interest for the taxpayers of this City, considered in connection with the recent exposé of the late Chamberlain, F. W. Edmonds. We have already called attention to the remarkable circumstance of $2,000,000 being left on deposit with the Mechanics' Bank nearly four months, free of interest, and to the candid confession of Mr. Edmonds, that he had used the funds of the Bank to secure this immense deposit, without the knowledge of the Directors. The Atlas quotes the following passage from the Mayor's first Message, which adds considerably to the interest which Mr. Edmonds' confession should excite:

"A further relief may be found in requiring interest on deposits with the City Treasurer, and collecting and disbursing officers generally. The equity, practicability and importance of this measure is so apparent, that it surprises me it has not become adopted. A very large revenue could be thus derived. There was to the credit of the City in the hands of the Treasurer, on the 28th of November, 1854, over $1,500,000; the 1st of December, 1854, $1,500,000, from which was drawn on these dates about $650,000, leaving about $2,000,000 to the credit of the City. Additional large sums have since been drawn, leaving, however, on the 1st of January, inst., a balance remaining to the credit of the City, of $1,383,474, for which the City receives no allowance of interest whatever. * * * * * * * I can see no reason for conducting the financial affairs of the City upon any other principle than that which governs the commercial intercourse of individuals.

I am satisfied that the nearer we approximate the laws of trade, the better will public business be conducted, and the interests of the treasury protected.

The City is obliged to pay interest, when using the funds of individuals, and it should receive interest from individuals, who have the use of its money.

Last year the Comptroller borrowed upon Revenue Bonds, $6,693,000, nearly the whole of which was borrowed at the rate of seven per centum, and for which we are still paying interest, notwithstanding the large amount now lying to the credit of the City in bank. How long could an individual or a banking institution retain its credit or its capital, that conducted its affairs on so ruinous a principle? The State of New-York discovered the value of its own revenues when lying in bank vaults, as early as 1826. It then adopted the policy of requiring interest upon its canal funds, which has been followed since, without deviation. My last advices from the capital state that two millions and a half of dollars have been already received from that source, for interest exclusively, on the deposits of this fund with the banks. And it is well known that some of the heads of the City collecting and disbursing revenue have been in the practice of receiving interest from various City banks, on the public money in their hands, which has gone into their own pockets as private perquisites."

The soundness of the Mayor's remarks no one can deny, nor help admiring his very forcible illustration of the extravagantly stupid policy of his predecessors in office. It is eight months since his Message was delivered, and still the funds of the City have been permitted to lie idle, so far as the public Treasury has been concerned, in the Bank where he found them. We cannot refrain from repeating Mayor Wood's pertinent inquiry:

"How long could an individual or a banking institution retain its credit or its capital, that conducted its affairs upon so ruinous a principle?"

We do not know precisely where the power of changing this practice is vested. If any further legislation on the subject is needed, we trust no time will be lost in securing the action of the Common Council upon the subject. If the Executive is already clothed with adequate power in the premises, we trust it will be promptly exercised.

Our Coast Defences.

It will be our own fault if we do not profit by the lessons which the Allies are teaching us in their war upon Russia; the Administration has sent out three officers of our Army to pick up some practical hints in the Crimea, but a good deal may be learned from the conduct of the war and its results by those who remain at home, and we do not imagine that the intelligent officers of our Army and Navy will be indifferent spectators of the great drama now being played before the eyes of the whole civilized world. The bombardment and fall of Sweaborg is not one of the least important of the lessons that this costly conflict of the great European Powers might teach us. Sweaborg was accounted one of the strongest fortified ports in the world—second only to Gibraltar or Cronstadt; but it has fallen and been entirely destroyed, it would appear, by the gun-boats and bomb-vessels of the French and English Allies, with very little harm to themselves. We published recently some remarks on an article in the Edinburg Review, tending to show the insecurity of stone fortifications; and the destruction of the immense fortifications of Sweaborg is a very striking exemplification of the writer's theory. All our principal seaports on the Atlantic are defended by costly and extensive fortifications of stone forts, but none of them that can be compared with the fortifications of Sweaborg—and the ease with which these great works have been demolished, demonstrates very clearly what reliance can be placed upon our forts. New-York, Boston, Newport and Norfolk are all defended by stone forts, but the only reliable security for defence against an enemy must be in our floating batteries. The defences of our own harbor are still in process of construction, and perhaps it would be illadvised to arrest their completion; but it would be a great folly to attempt the defence of other ports on a similar principle. Constant dependence for its security more upon the shallowness of water, which will not admit of the near approach of large ships, than upon the strength of its stone batteries, which, since the bombardment of Bomarsund and Sweaborg, will no longer be deemed impregnable, as they have been hitherto. The demolition of the fortifications of Sweaborg is of much greater importance, as showing the practicability of destroying such works than is any other view; and as we have a much greater line of sea coast and more ports to protect than any other country, the experience of Sweaborg is worth as much to us as to the Allies, who have to pay all the cost of it.

Symptoms of Insanity.

Mr. Edmonds states in his explanatory pamphlet that Mr. Burke, his assistant and antagonist Cashier, was once suspected of insanity, and rather broadly insinuates that his conduct in poking his nose into other people's cash drawers, can only be accounted for on the supposition of his insanity. Mr. Burke certainly has a propensity for investigation, very uncommon in Wall-street; and if he had been the assistant of Robert Schuyler, he would have been put into a straight jacket if he had attempted to excite a suspicion of that gentleman's integrity, but little more than a year ago.

To suspect railroad directors, or bank officers, of being capable of doing anything improper, has, in other cases, been regarded as an evidence of insanity. When Mr. Henry C. Carey, of Burlington, a few years ago, made very grave charges against the managers of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, he was pretty generally suspected of insanity, we believe, not only by the gentlemen implicated, but by his fellow-citizens.

Some very curious statements have been made by the two Cashiers, which might reasonably excite a suspicion of a crack in the Brain of one or the other, or of at least a very decided disposition for waggery. Mr. Burke states that when he called upon Mr. Edmonds after the investigation of the latter, he very amiably requested Mr. Burke to sit to him for his portrait. The desire of the Cashier to enrich his picture gallery with the portrait of the man who had caused him so much trouble, is really one of the most touching instances of Christian forgiveness that we remember. On the other hand, Mr. Edmonds relates an equally remarkable instance of tenderness on the part of Mr. Burke. Mr. Burke having succeeded in ousting Mr. Edmonds from the Cashiership, writes a letter to him requesting him to use his influence in having him (Burke) appointed to the place from which he had just been removed through his machinations.

Altogether, the two Cashiers are making an exposé which reminds us very much of Stephen Blackpool's "muddle." It is intimated that Mr. Knapp, the President of the Bank, is preparing his statement of the affair, and, out of the whole, the public will be likely to learn some edifying facts in regard to the manners and management of the Bank officers.

The Tables Turned.

Suits for breaking marriage promises are in this country usually brought by the female sex. We remember no case here in which a gentleman has sued a lady for breach of promise of marriage. In England a different practice seems to obtain. We find in the London papers the report of a case where suit was brought by a Mr. Holder, Captain in the 5th regiment of Lancashire Militia, aged 32, against a young lady of great personal attractions named Agnes Jobling, who had promised to marry him, accepted his presents, written him very long and very affectionate letters, worn the ring that pledged their mutual faith, and afterwards refused to marry him, because she had discovered she did not love him, but was only grateful to him for his attentions. The suit was brought, the plaintiff said, not to recover damages for wounded affections, but to cover the expenses he had incurred in paying visits, making presents, and getting ready for the wedding. His counsel thought £400 would cover all these, and had offered to accept £350; but the unfair fair one who had inflicted the injury, refused to settle on such terms. The jury returned a verdict for £300 damages. Suppose the practice should be introduced among us!

The Fever at Norfolk.

Although the yellow fever continues its work of death in Norfolk without abatement, there is good ground for hope that the number of cases will soon be lessened. Ample accommodations for hospital purposes, adapted to every requirement, have been obtained, and nurses are arriving every day. There is no doubt that very many cases which proved fatal, would, under more favorable circumstances, such as careful nursing and proper medical attendance, have had a more gratifying termination. The newspapers published in that city on Friday, are filled with brighter hopes than those of an earlier issue. They are cheered by the substantial sympathy they receive from abroad, and by a belief that the fever has assumed a milder form.

The Railroad Disaster.

We continue this morning our report of the testimony given at the Coroner's inquest, concerning the recent dreadful catastrophe at Burlington. The investigation, as prosecuted, is very thorough, and although on many points the evidence is conflicting, the important facts of the case are sufficiently established. The verdict of the Jury will not be rendered, probably, until this afternoon.

In addition to the report of the evidence, &c., we publish an impressive and eloquent sermon, preached by Bishop Doane, at Burlington, yesterday morning, upon this subject.

Affairs in Mexico.

We have received accounts of the abdication of Santa Anna, through the New-Orleans papers, much more in detail than previously published. The reports by telegraph are confirmed. Santa Anna left the City of Mexico on the 9th of August, at the head of 1,400 soldiers, under the pretext of quelling the revolution in Vera Cruz. On arriving at the fortress of Perote, he unveiled his real design, issued a proclamation declaring the Government in the hands of Payno, Vega and Salas, and called on the 17th of August for Havana, as is supposed. His ministers did not remain long behind him, fortunately for themselves, as the popular excitement which destroyed much of their property, would in all probability have dealt harshly with them had they been within reach. Subsequently Carrera was appointed Provisional President for six months. The new Government has in it a large proportion of the last one, who are closely united with the Church, and the liberal party are in consequence very much dissatisfied. A guard for the Presidency is very likely to ensue, the result of which cannot be foretold. The pleasure of Alvarez and Comonfort is not yet known.

The Submarine Telegraph.

We understand that private advices received from Sydney, Nova Scotia, Saturday morning, stated that the cable for the Submarine Telegraph was lost in a gale, and that the excursion party that went out to see it laid down will return to this City in the course of four or five days.

Amusements.

Metropolitan Theatre.—To-night M'lle Rachel makes her first appearance before an American audience at this theatre. To-morrow every one will say it marks an epoch in the history of American art. Not only is this remarkable tragedienne the greatest artist of her age, but the sole representative of a drama which would otherwise be dead. French tragedy lives in M'lle Rachel. Her genius alone makes it acceptable to the Parisians of to-day, and when she is gone, it will go, too. At least, modern criticism unhesitatingly says so.

In anticipation of to-night's performances we wish to say a word or two about the general principles of French tragedy. A glance at the theory will enable us to appreciate the practical excellence of M'dlle Rachel's efforts. French tragedy is so peculiar, so unlike anything to which we are accustomed, that, without this necessary talking, it is almost impossible to enjoy as we should the admirable entertainments now offered to us. We say this out of no respect to French tragedy as a school, but to M'dlle Rachel, and her associate artists who vitalize it. Whatever may be the opinions of those who witness the performances of to-night concerning the merits of the play, there will, we venture to say, be but one opinion concerning the great excellence of the players.

We are all tolerably familiar with the modern French drama, for in truth is it not our own? Do we not crib it with eagerness, and localize it by leaving out all the delicious scandal about the married state? But French Tragedy is an article which no country has had the hardihood to steal. La Harpe, speaking of it in general, and of Corneille in particular, says "their tone rises above flatness only to fall into the opposite extreme of affectation." This is perhaps a little unjust, for there is certainly much to admire in the poetical composition of these works. Rhetorical excellence, and occasionally brilliant narrative power, seem to us to be the redeeming traits of what would otherwise be wearisome works. The first thing that strikes an American on seeing a French tragedy, is the total absence of dramatic action. There are no "situations," no progress; no breath-suspending crises. Instead of these, the action and plot are explained in lengthy narratives. All the excitement has to be got out of the dialogue or not at all. To such an extent is this carried, that when, to satisfy poetic justice, some one has to be killed, the deed is quietly done (in the Tombs fashion) behind the scenes. Thus, in "Horatius," Camilla steps out quietly to be slaughtered. We hear her groans in the next room, and from this purely circumstantial evidence, conclude that the deed is done. These things have to be understood in their proper light before French tragedy can be enjoyed, and as they are the result of system, they may perhaps be worth understanding.

About the time that our own immortal Shakspeare was writing his romantic dramas and plays, the French dramatists were vigorously delving for correct classic forms and models. The Greek tragedies and those of Seneca were translated, and long prosy discussions were indulged in, to prove that nothing could be good that was not several thousand years old. The ancients were said to be the only masters of dramatic art, and what the ancients had done, constituted the models of classic propriety. To accord with this theory, it became necessary to follow the rules and conditions of the ancient stage. The result was, the present French tragedy, as we are now about to have it interpreted by M'lle Rachel. In all important particulars, it is based on the strictest rules of Aristotle and Plato. Corneille made a few unimportant deviations, but they were so trifling that he wrote a pamphlet to justify them by the rules of the ancients. They are enough, however, to make the tragedies of Corneille the most satisfying to the appetite of the present day.

It becomes imperative, therefore, to know what were the principles of the Ancient Classic Drama; for, without this knowledge, we shall scarcely be able to enjoy the force and vigor of the French imitations. It is no easy task to make clear what thousands have unsuccessfully attempted to explain. Still it is possible to convey to our readers and to those who are desirous of seeing M'lle Rachel, an idea of the general principles which governed the older French dramatists, and imposed restraints on their imagination and feeling,—whether advantageously or not, we are now to determine. The three great points of ancient drama, then, are the unities of Action, Time and Place; that is, the Action, which leads to the catastrophe of the play, must be sufficiently brief to be comprehended easily. "The extent of a tragedy," says Aristotle, "is always sufficiently great, if by a series of probable or necessary consequences, a reverse from adversity to prosperity, or from happiness to misery is brought about;" the Time sufficiently short to admit of none but the highest emotions. "It should seek as far as possible to circumscribe itself within one revolution of the Sun," says the same authority; and the Place sufficiently important to render a change of scene unnecessary. All these definitions have been disputed in every particular, and it is not easy to find two critics who agree on the subject. In the best French tragedies, as in some of the ancient classic ones, deviations are sometimes made. But for general purposes what we have said will be sufficient.

It will be perceived, therefore, that severity and simplicity are the characteristics of the French tragedies so far as plots are concerned. No underplots or perplexing mysteries are admissible; nothing, indeed, but what can be told by one person to another, and be immediately understood by all. Beyond these of instant and progress, French tragedy takes refuge in language and vituperation. When action there is in of the strongest kind, and is immediate in its effects. In the very nature of things it must be strong, for, as it is mostly explained in a narrative form, it would lose its interest were it other than of interest.

So much for the general scheme of French tragedy. The play in which M'lle Rachel makes her first appearance (tonight) is from the pen of a writer named Corneille. The singular is perhaps one of the distinguished author's best productions, although it does not rank with his other dramatic works of a different character. The language is sustained throughout in a manner that [illegible] ("Horatius,") is from the pen of a writer named Corneille. The singular is perhaps one of the distinguished author's best productions, although it does not rank with his other dramatic works of a different character. The language is sustained throughout in a manner that [illegible] poetical composition.

We give an outline of the plot. The characters are Camille, or Rodogune (Mlle Rachel), Sabina, an Alban lady, wife to Horatius; Julia, a Roman lady; Horatius, fils; Curiatius, an Alban lover of Camille; Valerius in love with Camille.

On the rising of the curtain the citizens of Alba and Rome are at war with each other; the armies are drawn up in battle array, to the great terror and grief of Sabina and Camille. Her whole life passes the day one of the fearful past, suffering these domestic relations extending to both armies. If the Romans are victorious Sabina's country will be subject to Rome, and three of her brothers (Romans) will be satisfied and plaudity slain; if the Albans gain the day her husband (a Roman) will be subjected and plaudity slain. Horatius is a young man, and Camille's lie is betrothed. Curiatius, her lover, is in the Alban army, and has three brothers in the Roman ranks. (One of the inconveniences of loving a foreigner.) Thus she must suffer grief under any circumstances. Fortunately the conflict of the two armies is averted by a plausible proposition from the Dictator, that three champions from each side shall be selected to decide the day by mortal combat. Curiatius (the Alban,) hastens to Camille, and joyfully informs her of this happy termination to their strife, but her joy is soon changed to sorrow, by the arrival of a messenger, who announces that the Albans have selected Curiatius and his two brothers as their champions, and that Horatius (the Roman,) and his two brothers have been selected by the Romans. Sabina plot is immediately narrowed down to an unnatural family conflict, and a host of emotions of the fervent character are provoked. Every kind of appeal is made to the combatants, but in vain; each champion is proud of the honor conferred on him by the choice of his country, and is apparently determined to stamp all human feeling. The time arrives for the combat, and notwithstanding all opposition, it takes place. Julia (a Roman lady), who has been on the battle field, brings word soon after to the elder Horatius that two of his sons have been killed, and that the third (Sabina's husband) has sought safety in flight. Horatius père impressively curses Horatius fils for running away, on the grounds that to survive is dishonorable, whilst there was the alternative of death. At this juncture another messenger arrives who puts a different complexion on things. The flight of Horatius fils was, it seems, only a stratagem to separate the three Albans, and was so successful that the Roman cut down his three opponents and gained the day. Camille's lover is of course one of the victims, and she is inconsolable. When her victorious brother arrives she greets him with passionate tears and terms of bitter rage. Horatius is naturally disturbed at this reception, and talks a good deal about Glory and Rome, and about avenging the loss of his two brothers and bringing honor to the roof of their ancient father. Camille directly asks who will avenge her for the loss of her lover, and talks with such aggravating common sense that Horatius fils loses all patience, and stabs her—not however, before she has uttered a fearful malediction on Rome.

As we have before hinted, none of these actions take place on the stage. They are narrated in high-toned verse. Portions of the second and third acts are remarkably fine, and afford ample scope for the genius of Mlle. Rachel. But the fourth act is where the enthusiasm will come from. Nothing has ever been seen in this country equal to the outbursts of wild passion which provoke the denouement.

Burton's Theatre.—Who will not be glad to hear that this neat little place is to be opened to-night for the season? A company of which we know nothing, from the fact that it is principally new, has been secured, and Mr. Burton himself, together with some of the old favorites of last season, appears. The pieces selected for to-night are well established and cannot fail to delight the audiences.

Broadway Theater.—Gabriel Ravel's engagement here has been so preeminently successful that it is to continue for a week, (perhaps two,) longer. The troupe appears to-night in favorite pieces.

Niblo's Garden.—"Cinderella" is withdrawn at the present. In its place we are to have the "Daughter of the Regiment" to-night. Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Harrison, and the other artistes of the troupe appear in this charming Opera.

Barnum's Museum.—The Dramatic season here commences to-night. The company is quite strong, remaining in important respects as it was last season. A new drop scene has been painted by Dreimaker, representing the Battle of Balaklava, surrounded by medallion likenesses of the belligerents. There will be two performances to-day. In the afternoon at 3 "Quite at Home" and the "Wandering Minstrel." In the evening at 7½ the Comedy of "Wild Oats."

Tabernacle.—A Testimonial Concert will come off here to-night for the benefit of that very worthy and courageous man, Charles Parkes, of Hose Company No. 25. It will be remembered that Parkes was severely injured at the Jennings fire last year—hopelessly so, it was thought. Go, if you possibly can.

Concert.—M'lle Parodi's third Concert is announced for Wednesday evening next. The Mesdames Hauser brothers will assist.

Buckleys' Serenaders, No. 539 Broadway, and Geo. Christy & Wood's, No. 473 Broadway, offer excellent programmes to-night.

City Mortality—Inspector's Report.

According to the City Inspector's report, the deaths in New-York, from the 26th of August until the 1st of September, amount to 548. Of these, 77 were men, 61 women, 192 boys, 218 girls; 139 were adults and 410 children. Of children under one year there were 224; between one and two, 130; between two and five 39, and from five to ten 7. The general health of New-York is satisfactory, as compared with the same period in other years. There is no epidemic or endemic diseases of a serious character. Sixty-four of the deaths last week occurred in our public institutions.

The Common Council.

Both Boards of the Common Council will commence their September sessions this afternoon, at 5 o'clock. We hope that the worthy Aldermen will find time to act upon many important matters which have been on their hands during the "heated term."

The paving of the Bowery with granite, and Maiden-lane and Cortlandt-street with iron, are important matters that ought to be disposed of immediately. The plans for the new City Hall have also been in the Committee of the Whole for months, after passing unanimously through the Board of Councilmen.

This very important matter has been delayed quite too long for the best interests of the City, and we hope that no further delay will be deemed necessary on the part of the Aldermen. The condition of the records in the various Departments, as shown by the committee appointed by the last Legislature, offers a conclusive reason for immediate action in order to secure a safe and suitable depository for these invaluable documents.

Reopening of the City Schools.

The various Public Schools reopen this morning after the annual vacation. The school buildings have been cleaned and repaired, under the direction of Mr. McVay, Superintendent of School Buildings, and are generally in fine repair. Additions and improvements have been made to several of the old houses erected under the direction of the old Public School Society, which will make them very commodious and desirable for school uses.

Fordham College.

The Summer vacation to the pupils of Fordham College has just closed, and the school reopens this day, (Monday.) It is [illegible] that the number of the students in the seminary of this old and Mother College of this vicinity indicates, will be numerical and full.

Monthly Schools.

All of the public schools in Brooklyn will reopen this day. Many improvements will be made, which have been much needed, and, where necessary, repairs have been made.

The numerous private institutions of learning for which Brooklyn is so justly celebrated, will also be reopened this present week.

BY GEORGE WATERHOUSE,

Royal Professor of Anatomy and Physiology, London.

THE MARRIED WOMAN'S PRIVATE MEDICAL COMPANION.

By Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Professor of Diseases of Women. One Hundredth Edition, (800,000.) 12mo. pp. 250. 125 fine engravings, extra binding, $1.

This work has been issued for 50 years, by comparing her own symptoms with those described, the married character and cases of her sex, and to avoid much anxiety and misery. The wife at her bosom, a mother has often need of instruction, and yet shrinks from asking her husband on the matter; and tell her what to do for it, in simple but chaste words, and such as she can understand.

Those suffering from obstructions or irregularities peculiar to the female system, or from prolapsus uteri, (falling of the womb) or from fever chills, will each find in its pages the means of prevention amelioration and relief.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Dayton, Ohio:

DAYTON, May 1, 1847.

Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU—My Dear Sir: My wife has been peculiarly sinking for some three years or more, in consequence of great anguish and suffering she experienced before and during confinement; every successive one more and more debilitated and prostrated her, putting her life in imminent danger, and which was on the last occasion despaired of. I suspected that this state of things was inevitable, and resigned herself to meet the worst. I heard your book highly spoken of, so commenced some matters reaching my case. On investigation and perusal I cannot express to you the relief it afforded my distressed mind, and the joy it spread throughout my house on learning that the great discovery of M. M. Dewees was not lost to the world. It opened a prospect to me which I felt could not be realized, but that, ere another year would have passed over my head, in all human probability my wife would have been in her grave, and my children fatherless.

For sale by STRINGER & TOWNSEND, No. 222 Broadway; ZIEGENFUSS & CO., Astor House, No. 1 Vesey-st.; DEWITT & DAVENPORT, (Tribune Building,) No. 154 Nassau-st., the Publishing Office, No. 128 Liberty-st., New-York; JOSEPH TOURNE, Mobile, Ala.; T. W. PETERSON, No. 102 Chestnut-st., Philadelphia. On the receipt of $1, a copy will be transmitted by mail, free of postage, to any part of the United States. Letters (post paid) addressed to Dr. A. M. MAURICEAU, Office, No. 129 Fulton-st., New-York, or to Box No. 1,228, New-York Post Office.

THE GREATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERY OF THE AGE.—Dr. KENNEDY, of Roxbury, has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds, a remedy that cures every kind of humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over 1,100 cases, and never failed, except in two cases, both Skinker Humor. He has now his testimonials from over 300 establishments of the virtues of it, all within 20 miles of Boston.

Two bottles are warranted to cure a nursing sore mouth.

One to three bottles will cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two to three bottles will clear the system of boils.

Two bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of the itch or scurvy.

Three to five bottles are warranted to cure the worst cases of scrofula.

One to two bottles are warranted to cure all humor in the eyes.

Two bottles are warranted to cure running of the eyes and blotches among the hair.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure corrupt and running ulcers.

One bottle will cure scaly eruption of the skin.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the worst case of ringworm.

Two to three bottles are warranted to cure the most desperate case of rheumatism.

Three to four bottles are warranted to cure the salt rheum.

Two to eight bottles will cure the worst case of scrofula.

Reader, I peddled over a thousand bottles of this in the vicinity of Boston. I knew the effects of it in every case, so sure as water will extinguish fire, so sure will this cure humor. I never sold but one bottle of it but that sold another; after a trial, it also was spoken for itself. There are hundreds about this here that appears to me surprising—first, that it grows in our pastures, in some places quite plentiful, and yet its value has never been known until I discovered it in 1845; second, that it should cure all kinds of humor.

In order to give some idea of the sudden rise and great popularity of the discovery I will state that in April, 1852, I peddled it, and sold about six bottles per day. In April, 1854, I sold over a thousand bottles per day.

Yours respectfully,

DR. KENNEDY'S OFFICE, No. 2 Division-st., New-York, is generally known to the public, may be consulted at his old established office, where he has practised in one branch of medicine for the last 24 years, and which more cures than any other man in the City in most cases of private or secret disease, some of which he has performed, to refer to as references. Charges moderate and in all cases a cure guaranteed. Caution.—My great remedy, Hunter's Red Drop that cures certain diseases without drying its poison in the blood, can only be had as above. Price $1. Call and get the Monitor of Health.

DR. RALPH'S PRACTICAL PRIVATE TREATISE—16th ed., 242 pp., with plates. The most clear and practical information, as given on every form of these diseases invariably followed with permanent cure, and restoring to perfect health and strength those who have passed over my head, in all human probability my wife would have been in her grave, and my children fatherless.

TRISKESMAR—THE GREAT EUROPEAN DISCOVERY—Protected by Royal Letters Patent of England, and secured by the seals of the Ecole de Pharmacie de Paris, and the Imperial College of Medicine, Vienna.

TRISKESMAR No. 1 is the remedy for general and local debility, loss of virile power, premature decay, and all the distressing consequences arising from early abuse. Its effects are efficacious in youth, manhood and old age. The virile powers would not become impaired, even in the decline of life if the Triskesmar were universally adopted; all physical impediments vanish like magic before its influence, thus rendering its use invaluable to those entering the married state.

TRISKESMAR No. 2—Completely and entirely eradicates all traces of those disorders, which exparia and exhels have so long sought an antidote for, to the ruin of the health of a great portion of the population.

TRISKESMAR No. 3—Is the great European remedy for that class of disorders which unfortunately the English Physician treats with mercury, to the inevitable destruction of the patient's constitution, and which all the Sarsaparilla in the World cannot remove.

TRISKESMAR No. 1, 2 and 3, are alike devoid of taste or smell, and all nauseating qualities. They may lay on the toilet table without their use being suspected.

Sold in the United States in 50 cents each, divided into separate doses, as administered by Vilpeau, Lallemand, Ricord, &c.

To be had wholesale and retail of Mr. H. A. BARROW, No. 21 Greenwich-st., New-York, agent for the Proprietor and Patentee as Agent for the United States, and every other part of America. Immediately on receiving a remittance Mr. Barrow will forward the Triskesmar to any part of the world, securely packed, and addressed according to the instructions of the writer.

Retail Agents required. Terms cash.

MOST IMPORTANT TO THE LADIES.—DR. MCLEAN'S celebrated MENSTRUAL PILLS are most astonishing in their effects in reaching and removing the various irregularities, suppressions and obstructions of Nature.

Specially adapted for females, they act like a charm—so gently and mildly, and yet so invariably efficacious, never failing to afford relief, and always successful as a preventive.

Married ladies will find particular instructions in the directions, in which are stated the various symptoms by which the causes of the suppression may be determined, as well as advice of the utmost importance.

Price One Dollar per box, containing explicit directions.

Each box will be signed by Dr. R. G. Gunther.

UPON THE INDIAN FRONTIER.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

FORT MASSACHUSETTS, New-Mexico, June 22, 1855.

Day before yesterday I returned again to this post, after having been on another scout against the Indians. Our forces were divided in Indian, into two commands, each of which took different routes. The party I was with unfortunately did not overtake the enemy, and was obliged to carry in other provisions. The other squadron overtook the families of the Indians and scattered them to the winds, all their young men being out in small parties plundering and murdering the inhabitants of the settlements. On our way part of our body came upon the bodies of nine Mexicans, lying upon the highway, having been murdered by the Indians, as they were carrying produce to the Arkansas for the purpose of trade.

On this scout I traveled through a new section of country, going to the East and Northerly, while, as you will remember, on our other expeditions we kept to the West. But as these Johnny Indians are hurried up mighty likely, they are not allowed time to pack their trunks nor to "wait for the wagons," for the Taxans, as they call us, are on their tracks.

The capacity of hunters and guides in discovering their trails, their numbers and even the different tribes, is so wonderful that had I not seen it I would not have believed it.

On one day we would be on the plains, on the next, perhaps, in the mountains, following early and into the narrow path of the pursued, in a zigzag course to ranges of wood and water, with alternating pleasant and rainy days. The rays of the sun, when it did shine and in dry sections of the country, like the plains, were boiling hot—still we marched on, every day being metamorphosed from whites to blacks, so that when I returned and looked in the glass I scarcely recognized myself, trying the Indians in this respect, as well as robust health. Our trip was a pleasant one, if anything of such a nature may be called so, but was at the same time full of hardships. Grumbling was out of the question, though we had rable-rouser and tamalales for bad fellows, bad water to drink, mules to encounter and rough provisions. We had been in worse places and seen harder times, as we were contrasts, as the Mexicans say.

Nature in majestic grandeur was spread out before us and clothed in her most beautiful robes. We breathed the purest air man ever breathed, while above us were flying the winged tribes, gorgeous with ever varying plumage, and around us animals roving in the wildest freedom. All these were ours, for which we simply should be thankful, whilst thousands are dying for the want of just such medicines. We are sometimes inclined to pity the victims of civilization, pining in inactivity, and wish they could enjoy for a year this wild mountain life.

When we shall have peace again in this country is hard to say. Some of the tribes wish it and others do not. But if we should have peace, unless the Indians should be made to work, so'ody is safe. The buffalo are running out, and in a few years, if they do not begin to raise corn, they are sure to starve or steal. If they pretend to be at plate with us they are at war with the Mormons, and vice versa. So it is with us and Texas. They call the emigrants on the road to California "Texans," because they always want to trade. Now, the Mexicans can furnish the world with cattle and sheep, as the grazing portion of this country is of such vast extent. When the Amer'cans first came to this country they bought fat sheep for two shillings each they were so plenty. Immense numbers have been sent to California, and owing to the Indians, those which remain have risen in value. The wool is mostly thrown away, their being no means of getting it into the States. Any man who would import a few blood sheep into the country could realize a fortune. The pasturage is rapid and great, while the Mexicans are the best herders in the world, and can be had for a mere song. So if we were at peace, a man with five thousand sheep could get rich while taking his ease, and the fitness of the country for raising them is proved by the thousands which are roving wild in the mountains.

Turning my eyes from my paper they just now fell upon a paragraph in an old paper lying beside me, and I quote it as an illustration of "manners and customs:" "A house to let on ——— avenue, in the town of T———. The house contains all the modern improvements, and has a good garden, and is situated in the midst of a large plum orchard, where they can be easily stolen. Rent low, and mostly taken in plums!"

When the California emigration first commenced most of the people came from the lower end of Pike County, Missouri; and this information pasted on the covers of their wagons, until it was thought that the whole county must be deserted. On asking one of these emigrants if this was the case, he answered, "Yes, stranger, all but the Justice of Peace, and we are going to stake him out a section in the mines, he having staid behind to wind up the county." One of these fellows having six horses also mule, which were wanted by a New-Mexican, he was asked what he would take for them. "Two dollars and a half," was the answer. "Oh, but that is too much," says the New-Mexican; to which the Pike man says nothing. After awhile the New-Mexican says, "Well, I will give you your price." "Now, stranger, you can't 'arve them at that air price, but when you hand me five dollars you can take the mule."

This exemplifies their mode of trading—the first price is price on it.

We are going to have a great celebration on the Fourth of July at Santa Fé, a number of officers being there just now, sitting on a Court Martial; but I stay at home to give others the privilege of going; and have no further news at present.

WEDNESDAY, June 27, 1855.

News has just come in of another victory over the Indians—seven killed and fourteen prisoners.

The Introduction of the Yellow Fever into Norfolk.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Monday, Aug. 27, 1855.

The yellow fever now so fatally prevailing at Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., was, it is generally believed, introduced by the steamer Franklin, last from Havana. After she anchored in our harbor, there were some cases resulting fatally on board. After an interval of several days, no new cases occurring, the Health Officer imprudently, it is generally thought, permitted the ship to go to Gosport—which is that part of Portsmouth nearest the Navy-Yard—to repair, upon a pledge from the captain, as the Health Officer states, that he would not drink out the hold; this he did, however, and two or more persons engaged in this work sickened and died. From that moment the disease spread rapidly and fatally, finding abundant material among 307 persons living in seven small, dirty houses in the immediate vicinity, where pigs were kept in the second story, and cows on the ground floor. From thence, at the end of about 14 days, it made its way to Norfolk, and first appeared in Berry's row, a collection of buildings of a character similar to those where it appeared first in Gosport, and filled with people and reeking with filth. From the two places above named, it, in the course of a few days, reached other parts of both cities, and at the end of two weeks became epidemic—in any sense the citizens living in the most favorable locations, surrounded by comforts, and in no way exposed to the infected districts, contracted the disease. At this time it prevails in every part of the city.

In temperament it is peculiar. Some have life taken suddenly and violently struck with a stick; others have for two days had slight pains in the back and back of the head, and not unfrequently accompanied by a slight chill, but gave little attention to it. On the third day, however, they would be certainly ill, and often died in 72 or 76 hours from the first (apparently unimportant) symptoms. Indeed, death frequently ensued in from three to five days, and I have known several instances where the strongest men have died on the third day.

Our Physicians have been most untiring in their efforts to administer relief, and such as have fallen have died at their stations.

Of the desertion of the Clergy much has been said falsely. As far as I am acquainted with them, and that is to a considerable extent, but two have left. Rev. Mr. JONES, of the Baptist Communion, left at the first appearance of the disease in Norfolk. It is said he was sick, and went away on that account with his family. The other was Rev. Mr. UMSTEAD, of the Episcopal Church, Portsmouth. He left with nearly all his congregation, and had, I know, been seriously sick for a long period, and probably had permission from his people. All the other clergy having charges, are still at their posts and laboring faithfully among their congregations.

It is painful to mention some abuses that have taken place. Two are flagrant. The owner of a vacant house, which would rent at most for $400 per annum, and would not rent till the 1st of January, that being the time at which our houses are rented here, made a neighbor pay him at the rate of $1,500 a year for his house, because he could at this time get whatever amount he had the hardihood to ask.

THE LAST DEAD BODY AND CLAIMANT.

INCIDENTS, &c.

The city of Burlington has not yet resumed its wonted quietness. The late railroad disaster continues the absorbing topic of conversation, and around which centres all effort and thought. At the scene of the accident, care has been taken to remove every slightest trace of the fearful slaughter of human life—even to smoothing the indentures made by one of the cars in the embankment. Upon the very night of the accident, as will be remembered, were burned the splintered fragments of the cars, with minutest remnants, torn cushions, and even bits of newspaper spotted with the blood of the numerous victims. And it is true no vestige now remains upon the ground of the dire calamity with which it was so recently visited. Not so in Burlington. The presence of the maimed and disabled, of suffering and death caused by this calamity, is still apparent. Hardly a block is there in the city but within its boundaries is nursed and witnessed the agony of one or more victims of the disaster. And it will be a long time indeed, before the people of Burlington will forget this visitation. In their sympathy for the sufferers, however, they have hardly, as yet, stopped to consider to which the accident is to be attributed—to obvious negligence of the Railroad Company, or obtuse carelessness of Dr. HEINEKEN.

To-day, doubtless, will terminate the inquest. In a few more days most of the disabled will be able to leave town—then deliberation will doubtless succeed present excitement, and Burlington resume its wonted quiet. Our Reporters, meanwhile, have given such extended account of the catastrophe, with mental of the numerous and interesting incidents connected with the disaster, that of outside facts, beyond the evidence elicited in the Coroner's investigation, but little remains to be added.

DEATH OF MR. GILLESPIE.

Mr. JOHN F. GILLESPIE, of Natchez, Miss., who our reporters stated in their last account was lying in an exceedingly critical state, has since died. His death occurred Saturday shortly after 1 o'clock. The event, although not unlooked for, has added much to the lowering gloom. Announcement was made of the fact to the Coroner during the afternoon's session. The condition of Mrs. GILLESPIE, wife of the deceased, being deemed very serious, from the injuries she had herself sustained from the accident, it was suggested by her Physician that she should be kept, if possible, in ignorance of the death of her husband. It being necessary the Jury should examine and identify the body, the Coroner under the circumstances directed that only the foreman should accompany him, instead of the entire Jury, so as not by their united presence to excite the fears of Mrs. GILLESPIE.

Mr. GILLESPIE was aged 54. He was a wealthy planter. He had his will drawn soon after receiving his fatal injuries, wherein he disposed of property to the amount of nearly $600,000. Mr. GILLESPIE, in company with his wife, was on a pleasure tour to the North for recreation and health. He was a man universally respected for his unvarying integrity of conduct—his marked courteousness of manners—large benevolence—which was never deaf to misery or want. The body will be taken to Natchez, Miss., under the care of WM. BENNETT, Esq., his brother-in-law.

CLAIMANT OF THE LAST DEAD BODY.

The last body of those killed, it will be remembered, was identified, or at least alleged, as being that of Mr. CHARLES HUMPHREYS, of Peoria, Ill. The party claiming to make the identification was a lady, who stated that she was the sister of Mr. JACOB HOWARD, also killed, of Illinois, Tenn. A degree of mystery seems now to have involved this alleged identification, as this lady was entertained of the truthfulness of the statement made by the lady in question. It appears that this lady, who gives her name as Mrs. DRAKE, of Boston, came on to Burlington after the accident, and stated that she was sister of Mr. HOWARD, whose body had, meanwhile, been removed to Philidelphia, and was in charge of the Free Masons. She asked for Mr. HOWARD's effects, consisting, among other things, of some $3,000, deposited in the Burlington Bank; but they were refused her until after the appointment of an administrator. She expressed her apparent satisfaction with such course, and is not seen again until Friday night, when she again returns, and identifies and claims the body of Mr. HUMPHREYS. She produced the following rather curious epistle in justification of her claims. We give it, not sparing the redundancy of capitals:

BOSTON, Aug. 31, 1855.

MR. COREMAN: This informs you that Mrs. JULIETT C. DRAKE is Duly Authorized By me to take the Body of my brother and Effects to Peoria, Ill., And that her Expenses are to be paid By the Company, and such other expenses as she shall see fit to Ask for. I am not able to come to Burlington to see my brother CHARLES HUMPHREYS. Mrs. DRAKE thought it NATHANIEL, but it is CHARLES HUMPHREYS.

I am, with respect, yours, WM. HUMPHREYS.

I am witness to the Above, which Authorises Mrs. J. C. DRAKE to take charge of the Body of CHARLES HUMPHREYS and also give her power to commence a suit or sue for Mr. HUMPHREYS.

(Written by W. HUMPHREYS.)
(Empowered by J. HALLET.)

Witnesses, { DANIEL DYER, Esq., H. WOODMAN, Esq., Boston.

A striking feature about this letter was, that it was all uniform in the same hand-writing. The lady second very much emboldened that the statement should be questioned, and instead that not only the Coroner's Jury, but the Railroad Company would find out she was right. Meanwhile she transmitted the following telegraphic dispatches:

TO WARREN DRAKE, Chicago, Ill.:

They would not deliver the body of Mr. HUMPHREYS to me. I have gone to Washington for further orders.

Mrs. J. C. DRAKE.

To Senator WILSON, at President Pierce's House, Washington, D. C.:

I have waited all day for the body of Mr. HUMPHREYS and they still refuse to give it up. Meet me at the depot to-morrow morning, as I cannot obtain it without further assistance.

Mrs. N. J. DRAKE.

The dispatches were sent. As this lady is the only party claiming to know the deceased, great curiosity is felt to ascertain the credibleness of her assertions. Mrs. DRAKE, as she calls herself, is a woman about 30, dark complexion, and over proportionate stature, dressed in black, very tall, stoopt some, and talks with great volubility.

The following letter was also received, addressed to one of the Jury, in relation to the body of Mr. HUMPHREYS:

[illegible] Aug. 31, 1855.

W. W. MILLER, Esq.—Dear Sir: I being a resident of Peoria, Illinois, and a near neighbor of Mr. HUMPHREYS, who is supposed to be killed in the late accident on Burlington, I desire to encourage if his remains were identified, and what disposition has been made of his effects.

If necessary, I will come to Burlington without delay. Let me hear from you on receipt of this.

Yours, truly, ISAAC UNDERHILL.

MR. MILLER.—The above is written by my brother-in-law, and if you will have the kindness to make inquiry as above, you will oblige your friend,

ALVE E. LAING.

N. B.—Please address to the care of me, one letter at Rahway, N. J., and another at No. 160 Water-street, New-York, that we may get the earliest information.

THE WOUNDED REMAINING IN TOWN AND THEIR CONDITION.

Of the injured there remain at present in Burlington, only twenty-four.

The slightly wounded, as previously stated, left for the most part, on the day of the disaster. Those more seriously injured have continued to linger, in fact as the nature of their injuries would admit. The number compelled to remain comprise those whose limbs are fractured or who are suffering from severe internal injuries. The most unremitting assiduity and every attention in fact, that the willing Christian charity and delicate sentiment to be manifested there. General sympathy with profiers of private administration to their comfort and accommodation, is not distinctly in the slightest degree abated.

The following list embraces all the injured remaining in town, and their condition at the time our reporter left Saturday evening:

1. Hon. WM. B. MACLAY, of New-York, still lies confined at the house of Col. Wall. His brother, Dr. H Maclay, of New-York, remains with him. Though from the severity of his injuries, he will, doubtless, be confined some time, he is rapidly convalescing. The greatest difficulty is oppression of the chest.

2. Judge REEVES, of Chillicothe, Ohio, severely injured in the right shoulder with contusion of the chest, will be able to leave in a day or two.

3. JOHN PUGH, Schuylkill Co., Penn., right leg broken below the knee and body considerably bruised, is doing as well as could be expected.

4. CAROLINE PRINGLE, of New-York, struck by an iron bar and injured internally, though in a critical state, hopes are entertained of her recovery.

5. CHARLES DIXEY, badly injured in the spine, it is thought will get well.

6. OTIS FISK, of Middleton, Conn., had half his right foot amputated on Thursday night, and is doing very well.

7. GEO. F. HARLAN, Cecil County, Md., left collar bone broken, is quite comfortable.

8. SAMUEL LAHM, of Canton, Ohio, suffering from concussion of the brain, is improving.

9. Mrs. KEYS, of Charleston, S. C., injured internally, is rapidly convalescing.

10. W. H. NEWBOLD, of Philadelphia, will be able to leave in a few days.

11. Miss NEWBOLD, though but slight bruised, remains with her father.

12. Mrs. BOYCE, of Georgetown, D. C., is improving rapidly.

13, 14. The son and daughter of Mrs. BOYCE, slightly injured, are both very nearly recovered.

16. THOMAS FINLEY, of Philadelphia, with left collar bone fractured, is quite comfortable.

18. Mrs. PHILLIPS, of New-York, will lose her left eye; otherwise is improving rapidly.

19. DENNIS C. LOW, of Georgetown, D. C., right leg and thigh broken, is in a very encouraging condition.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At the baggage room of the Dépôt at Burlington is presented a curious conglomeration of smashed hats, covered carpet bags and valises, and clothes torn to shreds, with illimitable collars and gravats and books. All baggage checked was sent on to New-York, where it now waits the proper claimants.

Bishop DOANE, it was stated, would preach yesterday upon the subject of the late disaster.

NO LIVES OF THE PASSENGERS!

Some years ago, on the Camden and Amboy lines, as also on the New-Jersey road, when its passengers went by water to Tacony, it was customary to record the name of each passenger at the moment he purchased his ticket. This practice, however, has been discontinued, and no means exist of ascertaining who is on board of any train, except by hearing from each party. One of our reporters visited the office of the Company in Philadelphia for the purpose of obtaining, if possible, a list of persons who took passage in the 10 o'clock train from that city on Wednesday morning, but found it impossible to procure anything of the kind. We thought the publication of a complete list of the passengers of that day would serve a useful purpose, at least in affording to friends in different parts of the country accurate information concerning the presence of certain parties on board. We are now forced to rely upon the lists of killed and wounded; believing, however, that the entire extent of the calamity is at last ascertained.

ENGINEERS' FRACTURES.

We are given to understand, from reliable sources, that the regulation of the Company which hurries the trains to watch for each other at the half-way pole, north of Burlington, has already operated in a very disadvantageous manner. It is not unfrequently the practice of the engineers of the opposing trains, to attain a point in order to reach this pole first. If both trains chance to arrive at the same moment, there is sure to be an interchange of unsavory compliments, and time is lost in disputing. The engineers are naturally averse to backing for two miles or more, as they are required to do, and hence the rivalry. It is this regulation of the Railroad Company which appears to have been the primary cause of the disaster. The reckless driving of Dr. HEINEKEN operated as the secondary cause, and ended in the fatal result. We do not learn that any words occurred between the engineers of the two trains on this occasion. On the contrary, the down train was observed by Engineer ADAMS, of the up train, in ample season to prevent an approach nearer than a half mile, and no difficulty was afterward experienced in stopping the down train before it reached the scene of the disaster. That collisions do not actually occur, is not, however, because there is any lack of opportunity so long as this absurd regulation of the Company remains, as it yet does, in full force.

[Conclusion of Friday's Proceedings.]

EVENING SESSION.

Pursuant to adjournment the Jury assembled at the Lyceum to hear further testimony regarding the terrible Railroad casualty. The hall was nearly filled with spectators. The first witness called on was JOHN ROGERS, the foreman of the Jury, who, being sworn, made the following statement:

EVIDENCE OF MR. JOHN ROGERS.

I was in the ten o'clock train on Wednesday last, on my way to Trenton; I was first sitting in the way car, but left it for a time and went into the mail car and entered into a conversation with Mr. Harvey, and again returned to the way car; the train went pretty fast; I heard two whistles to stop the breaks; I went out on the platform and could see for a considerable distance ahead of our train; I saw a locomotive which I supposed was attached to the eight o'clock train from New-York, which was past due at Burlington; I then heard one puff of the whistle, and immediately after three very quick puffs, which was the signal to back, the train having stopped in the mean time; I went back to the car directly in the rear of the mail car; I sat down about one-third of the distance from the front of the car by the side of Colonel Hamilton of Bridgeton, Mr. Samuel Striker was sitting opposite. We asked me why we were backing; I told him that we had missed the hair way post about half a mile, and that the new-York train had the right of the road; I looked out on the stop side of the train, and saw that we were going pretty fast; immediately after I felt a slight trembling of the car; the question was asked, "What is that cement by?" it was answered by some one, "They are tightening the brakes;" immediately after this trembling there was an up and down motion of the cars; I felt as near as I could tell, one or two strokes; I then heard the crashing; the cars seemed to be pushed together; the motion of the cars was then as if they were thrown off the track; I then felt a shock; the motion of the cars was then as if they were thrown off the track; I then felt a shock; the motion of the cars was then as if they were thrown off the track; I then felt a shock

MONDAY, Sept. 3—A. M.

The Stock Market on Saturday opened with considerable vigor, but closed tamely and heavily. The sales at the early meeting of the Stock Board were large, chiefly of Railway Bonds and Shares, and the prices then obtained exhibited greater firmness than those of the previous day. The transactions during the afternoon session, however, were limited, and left quotations quite weak, with an inclination favorable to buyers. State Securities were not in much demand during the day, nor were they freely offered, hence they varied little in value. The heaviest operations in Railway Bonds occurred in Illinois Centrals, which opened at 85¾, rd., and closed at 85¾, b3. New-York Central Bonds brought 91½, s3. Hudson River Bonds 75¾, cash; Panama Bonds, second issue, 108; and New-York and New-Haven Bonds of 1866, 93½.

New-York Central shares were not very brisk, but commanded rather better prices. A fair business was transacted in Erie shares, at about former rates; and in Reading shares—but these were somewhat depressed in price. Cleveland and Toledo shares were also pretty active, but informal. Market for Canton shares reported another checkered, with but slight fluctuations of value. The Money Market, on Saturday, displayed greater ease, as it was rather better supplied, while lenders exercised less demand from responsible borrowers. Though no quotable change occurred in loan or discount rates, there possessed less firmness. Foreign Exchanges ruled quiet and nominally the same. There was nothing of moment done therein, for the Nord Stern, which sailed hence, Saturday noon, for Havre—carrying out treasure freight to the amount of $[illegible]. The regular Sub-Treasury balance on Saturday afternoon was $3,462,082, the day's receipts having amounted to $276,359, and the payments to only $[illegible].

The Foreign Trade of this port during the past week comprised, on the import of Dry Goods and General Merchandise, $3,121,438, against $3,271,468 the corresponding week last year. For the calendar year, to the present date, the total imports into New-York is $[illegible], against $174,203,000 to same date in 1854. The exports of Domestic Produce and Manufactures Goods during the week equalled $766,376, against $1,003,053 the corresponding week last year. For the calendar year to the present date the total Export, exclusive of Specie, from New-York, is $[illegible], against $[illegible] to same date in 1854. We have no official return of the Specie Export during the week. No packet left this port on Wednesday, but a Cunarder sailed from Boston on that day, taking out $847,400 in Specie, of which amount over $600,000 had been transmitted hither. Saturday's direct Export of treasure from New-York, by the Nord Stern, for Havre, was, as mentioned above, $[illegible]. The direct Specie Export during the same week last year, reached $1,[illegible]. The California Gold Deliveries during the week $712,000, against $1,022,000 the corresponding week in 1854; and the total receipts, reckoned by the manifests of the California steamers, thus far, in 1855, are $[illegible], against $34,284,480 to same date in 1854. The following are the particulars of the Exports of the week other than Specie:

The subscriptions by the shareholders of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to the proposed issue of Bonds, to free the Company from its indebtedness to its Commercial Agents, Messrs. HOWLAND & ASPINWALL, not having as yet been generally made, it is now announced that the period for subscribing has been extended to the 5th of September, when, if the requisite amount is not obtained, the scheme must be abandoned—at least, for the present.

The Grand Jury of Lancaster, Pa., have found a bill against Mr. BONONOPE, the alleged defaulting Treasurer of the Lancaster Savings Institution. The indictment charges him with embezzling the sum of $275,000, and appropriating it to his own use.

A new House for the transaction of the general stock, bond, exchange and collection business has been formed under the firm of STEVENS, WALLACE & MORRIS, who will transact their business at No. 25 William-street. The first two gentlemen have up to this time conducted in company a similar business, and the junior partner is Mr. C. O. MORRIS, late cashier of Messrs. WINSLOW, LANIER & CO. Having been employed in that house for the last nine years is sufficient evidence of his qualification for the station he has now assumed.

Mr. PARKER HANDY, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, and a gentleman of much experience in banking, has been appointed cashier of the Ocean Bank of this City, to fill the vacancy caused by the transfer of Mr. GEORGE S. COE to the cashiership of the American Exchange Bank.

It is now stated that the directors of the New-York Central Railroad Company have declined to recede from their resolution to adopt the new mode of transfer and registry, as requested by the Board of Brokers. The plan which we have already described is to be carried out in its integrity from this day forward.

We have been requested to state that a meeting of the stockholders of the New-York and New-Haven Railroad is to be held, according to previous announcement, at New-Haven, to-morrow, Sept. 4, to take action on the two acts recently passed by the Connecticut Legislature, affecting the interests of this road.

ALBERT H. NICOLAY'S regular semi-weekly sale of bonds and stocks will take place on Monday, at 12½ o'clock, at the Merchant's Exchange.

Mr. JOHN BURKE'S second letter in reply to the pamphlet of Mr. F. W. EDMONDS, late Cashier of the Mechanics' Bank, has been published. It is much more personal than the first one, and has still less interest for the general reader. It is addressed to the Stockholders of the "Mechanics' Bank, and opens thus:

"On the 20 of August, having unanimously accepted the resignation of the Cashier, the Board appointed the President and myself a committee to ascertain the defalcations of Mr. Edmonds to the Bank, and in performing that duty, I drew, as hastily, because I had but little time to devote to it, the estimates of the loss sustained by the Bank by Mr. Edmonds' malpractices, which fell into the hands and were published by him. This is exactly as intended, as its title indicates, and not part of the charges against Mr. Edmonds represents, and the "compound interest" which has excited so much animadversion, is in strictly a loss to the Bank as any other item. I find, and have now, no desire to pursue Mr. Edmonds with unnecessary severity; all I have stated was that he should refund what was fairly due the Bank."

Mr. BURKE proceeds "to consider Mr. Edmonds' defence." "The first charge I made against him was: 'Receiving large sums of interest from the first teller, and items of exchange from the second teller for a series of years, and appropriating a portion of said sums to his own use.'" Mr. Edmonds admits having received these moneys from the tellers, but says "every item is a valid" he passed the aggregate of those payments to the interest account. Now, what do the books say? From January, 1846, to October, 1846, four years and eight months, the cashier received from the second teller all items of exchange collected by the Bank but did not credit one dollar on the books of the bank. In October, 1846, he credited $[illegible] but from that time to January, 1846, one year and three months, not a dollar. So that Mr. Edmonds's "sums for a valid" seems to be one in six years. Rather a long while.

But Mr. Edmonds says, "the President and myself were in the habit of paying from that money various little expenses of the Bank." What were these little expenses? I know of none. I cannot even imagine any. All the legitimate, regular incidental expenditures of the Bank were provided for in other ways. But, says Mr. EDMONDS, "most of these expenditures grew out of the Chamberlain's office." I answer, during those years the Bank had nothing to do with the Chamberlain's office. And it contains does seem a little singular that those unknown and inexplicable "little expenses" should absorb the entire receipts from the Second Teller (excepting $[illegible] 20) for a period of six years. From January, 1846 to 1851, the amount credited to interest account by the Cashier is $1,709.90, about $29 50 ⅌ month. From August, 1851, to January, 1855, the amount actually paid over by the Second Teller is $2,948, about $73 ⅌ month. Whether there was this difference—$40.20 ⅌ month—between the receipts from this source, of 1846 to 1851, and those of 1851 to 1855, or whether those "little expenses" make up the deficiency, who can say?

From January, 1851, to January, 1855, Mr. Edmonds credited interest account, [illegible] $3,402 14

The second teller paid him from August, 1851, to January, 1855, [illegible] $2,948

Balance, January, 1855, to August 18th, the [illegible] teller kept no account of his payments, but taking the average of the above $73 per month for seven months, the amount would have been [illegible] 511

Leaving a balance of [illegible] 240 14

During this period, Mr. COOKE, (the first teller,) testified before the Board of Directors, that he paid Mr. Edmonds "checks on Issue, about $150 monthly, making $7,200, leaving unaccounted for during these years, $7,160 13. What became of this money?"

Mr. BURKE continues: "I charged Mr. Edmonds, secondly, 'with appropriating to his own purposes, instead of the benefit of this institution, as had been done up to May, 1851, the interest received from the Union and Susquehanna Railroad Company, and the Canton Company, of Baltimore, and with subsequently receiving it in the Edgeworth Company.'"

To this Mr. Edmonds replies, that "it is a most damaging charge against my good conduct, to have done any thing with the interest of the Bank." I answer, it was not usual in the Mechanics' Bank, and was never done until May, 1851. He says, "Now, Mr. Burke knows it was customary in the Bank, and I have in the transfer of my knowledge of the Canton Company, to which he refers, it was by an express consent of the Board that I was allowed $4,000 annually to supplement the salary for keeping their number books." I find in the minutes of the Board, dated May 20, 1850, the following:

"Resolved, that the Board consent to the request of the City of the Canton Company of Baltimore, for the transfer of their stock, and that the President of this Bank be authorized to do so, and that the Cashier be authorized to receive the dividends on the same, and pay over the same to the Canton Company, and that Mr. Edmonds be allowed
